Democratic Youth Hails Third Term, Liberalism

McNutt Advocates 3-Point Program to Protect Liberties, Provide Security

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 11.—Between applauded speeches demanding a "third-term" for President Roosevelt, or at least for his "ideas," Paul V. McNutt outlined before the National Young Democrats' convention tonight a three-point program for "modern liberalism."

He also lauded the President in superlative terms and promised an enlarged social security program to cover health and disability programs.

The speech of McNutt, an avowed candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, touched off a wild demonstration. The delegates shouted and yelled while several bands marched around the convention hall creating the loudest din of the conclave.

Second McNutt Speech

It was the former Indiana Governor's second important address since he was named by the President as Federal Security Administrator, the first being at Cleveland several weeks ago, when he strung along with the Roosevelt foreign policy. He did not mention 1940 tonight, but previously, in an interview, he reiterated he would withdraw from the race if the President sought a third term.

Before the McNutt demonstration, the convention gave a rousing ovation to young Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, when he asserted:

"It is not for Roosevelt to tell us that he wants a third term, but it is rather for us to tell Roosevelt that we want a third term. Now is the time to raise the banner of Roosevelt for 1940!"

Later, Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson declared the Republican-Democratic coalition in Congress had licked some of the Roosevelt program "but they have not licked Roosevelt." He said their tactics had increased the demand for a third term.

Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, Senate party leader, earlier in the day had been warmly applauded in an informal address predicting the 1940 convention would not repudiate the "eight years of Roosevelt."

Another development tonight was the withdrawal of John Neff, of Staunton, Va., from the race for the presidency of Young Democrats. Like Pat Beacom, of Huntington, W. Va., another candidate, Neff gave up in the interest of "harmony" and assured the election tomorrow of Homer Mat Adams, of Springfield, Ill.

Defines Modern Liberalism

Speaking on the "meaning of modern liberalism" McNutt said at least three great aims of liberalism are:

Vigilant protection of "those civil liberties which are the life-blood of our democratic system."

Remedy the "many diverse abuses which have threatened the safety of our economic and social order," including "thoughtless destruction" of natural resources and other abuses he said had grown out of the "excessive concentration of private economic power."

Make "our economic machine turn out the abundant production of which it is capable."

He said the country is "bursting with pent-up energy" and on one point he was sure:

"Our people will never resign themselves to permanent unemployment for able-bodied workers. They know there is plenty of useful work to be done and that we have the resources and the capacities to assure a decent life for everyone willing to work."

McNutt, heading a list of half a dozen speakers at the night session, said President Roosevelt is the "greatest living exemplar of Democratic liberalism" and, during his Administration, "greater strides" in social legislation had been made than in any previous.

If the President had accomplished nothing more than his social secu-

Warplanes Raid Camp at Manassas

Two D. C. Commissioners and Three Governors See Impressive Sham Battle at Old Field

By John G. Norris.
A Staff Correspondent.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 11.—As two District Commissioners and the Governors of three States looked on, warplanes and anti-aircraft batteries put on an impressive demonstration of bombing attack and defense here tonight.

Fifteen Army planes roared over the Third Area encampments in three raids simulating dive bombing and ground-strafing. Defenders, the 260th Coast Artillery from Washington and the 213th, from Pennsylvania, replied with searchlight beams, machine gun fire and their latest type 3-inch sky guns.

The demonstration marked the end of the first phase of the Third Corps maneuvers.

The Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth divisions swung into action early this morning in the largest and longest "battle" to date. Maj. Gen. Milton A. Record, of the latter, had his men in the field by 6 a. m. and the umpires did not call a halt until 2 p. m.

Opposing the Twenty-ninth was the First Battalion of the First Maryland Infantry under Maj. Winfield B. Harward. They represented a reinforced brigade attempting to delay an enemy division attacking Washington. Taking up position on the hills east of Bull Run, they held off the attackers until flanked on both the left and right.

The Maryland brigade moved down Lee highway from their camp near Groveton with the Virginians paralleling the course on an old country road a mile south.

Finding the enemy holding the heights beyond Bull Run, Gen. Reckord's men deployed an advance guard, kept up intermittent fire

Former Marine Held in $2,500 Bank Robbery

FBI Says He Admits 'Bomb' Holdup of Annapolis Trust Co.

A 23-year-old marine yesterday admitted the single-handed "bomb-threat" holdup of the Annapolis Bank and Trust Co., at Annapolis, Md., Wednesday, in which he escaped with $2,500, the Justice Department announced last night.

The man, Wilbur Russell Davis, formerly stationed on the U. S. S. Cumberland at Annapolis, was arrested yesterday afternoon in Baltimore by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents of the Washington office. After several hours questioning, the FBI reported, he confessed he had walked into the bank, scribbled a note that he would blow it up, passed the message to a teller, and walked out with the money, in $10 bills in an old sack.

He insisted that he accomplished the theft, the first bank robbery of modern times in Maryland's capital, without any outside help, the FBI said.

Agents reported they found $1,921 on Davis and quoted him as saying the rest had been spent by his wife "to clear up old debts and buy new clothes." Mrs. Davis was not arrested or questioned, but G-men will investigate the story today.

E. Emerson Wiley, 25, the teller from whom the money was taken, said the thief shoved notes threatening to blow the bank up, over the counter with his left hand, menacing with his right, which was bandaged. Wiley believed that the bomb was concealed in the wrappings.

A customer, who pursued the robber about a fifth of a mile after he fled, was said to have given the FBI the clues which enabled them to arrest Davis.

Two Flying Ocean In Plane of Type Lindbergh Used

Canadian Press

St. Peters, Nova Scotia, Aug. 11.—Two New York fliers took off for Ireland today in th same type of plane that carried Charles A. Lindbergh across the Atlantic 12 years ago.

They were Alex Loeb, 32, and Dick Decker, 23. The pair did not announce their plan until they were almost ready to go, and only a few spectators saw them rise from a sandy beach near here.

Loeb said he first decided to fly the ocean when Lindbergh made his 1927 flight to Paris.

Annenberg Indicted in Huge Tax Case

$5,548,384 Levies And Penalties Claimed; Son, 2 Others Accused

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 11.—M. L. Annenberg, whose publishing interests and horse race information services span the continent, was indicted today on charges of owing $5,548,384 in taxes and fines on his income in the largest criminal tax case on Government records.

A Federal grand jury accused him of wilfully evading income taxes totaling $3,258,808.87 during the five years in the 1932-36 period, and, in casting up the account, added $2,289,574.92 in penalties and interest.

Three Others Charged

Charged with aiding and counseling him were Annenberg's son, Walter, and Arnold W. Kruse and Joseph E. Hafner, alias Samuel Goldfarb, who were listed as officials of the Cecelia Co., top holding firm in Annenberg's newsprint and wire empire.

Annenberg, publisher of the Philadelphi Inquirer and a number of magazines and turf sheets and owner of a racing news network reaching across the United States and into Canada, issued a statement declaring he welcomed an opportunity to present his side of the case in court, and asserting neither he nor his associates had any intention of violating the laws.

"There will be many more Annenberg indictments," District Attorney Campbell told reporters. He declined to amplify the remark, but said the grand jury which made a two-month inquiry into Annenberg's income was "still considering other Annenberg phases" and would resume its sessions Monday.

Heard 227 Witnesses

At that time, he added, the jurors would begin a study of the income taxes of William R. (Billy) Skidmore, wealthy junk dealer, who has been called by State's Attorney Courtney as one of the bosses of the Chicago gambling "syndicate."

Campbell announced, too, that a second grand jury, assigned to an investigation to determine if the Annenberg racing news services had violated antimonopoly and anti-racketeering statutes, would resume its task Monday.

The jurors who returned the Annenberg indictment heard 227 witnesses and studied 17 wire services and 5 different types of business since they were sworn on June 5. The second jury began work on July 11.

D. C. Woman Killed, Husband Hurt in Death-Curve Crash

A Washington woman was killed and her husband injured late yesterday when their automobile hurtled off a hairpin turn on Livingston road southeast, near the District line. The woman was the District's fifty-first traffic fatality this year.

Mrs. Nellie Paxon, 29, of 510 Eleventh street southeast, was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Elizabeths Hospital. Her husband, Chester B. Paxon, 35, a driver for the District, was cut about the head, treated at Casualty Hospital, and later taken to the Eleventh Precinct station.

Police reported Paxon was driving a light coupe when it skidded more than 100 feet, plunged into a ditch and overturned several times, a few feet within the District line.

Mrs. Paxon was pulled from the wrecked car, unconscious, by Mac Woodard, of 3812 First street southeast, and John Edward Shreve, of 3990 Livingston road southeast, who saw the crash. They took the couple to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the car of Marion Majors, 2901 Twenty-first street southeast.

Arriving after the crash victims had been carried away, a Casualty Hospital ambulance returned to St. Elizabeths and picked up Paxon. Two blocks from Casualty the ambulance ran out of gas and Paxon was transferred to a taxicab for the rest of the way.

Police said the Livingston road turn had been the scene of numerous automobile accidents. Two telephone poles have been knocked down in recent crashes, they said.

Security Act Amendments Become Law

Roosevelt Calls Bill a 'Tremendous Step Forward' as He Signs Measure

By the Associated Press

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 11.—President Roosevelt today signed a bill making far-reaching changes in the social security program and cleared away most of the other measures which Congress left on his hands.

The Chief Executive at his press conference handed around a formal statement in which he said the amendments to the social security act "represent another tremendous step forward in providing greater security for the people of this country."

Discussing a congressionally rejected proposal under which the Government would have supplied $2 for each State dollar up to $15 and then matched funds thereafter up to $40, for old-age assistance, the President said it would have meant a start toward federalizing the whole thing.

Fears Entering Wedge

The Federal Government obviously could not take over the whole program, he said, unless it took over, too, certain fields of State taxation.

The danger, he said, was that the amendment would have been an opening wedge for another amendment next year to make the Government pay the first $15 and for still another later on to have it pay $25.

The proposal was designed to help poorer States, particularly in the South. The President said there were eight or ten States paying no old-age pensions or such ridiculously low ones they were out of line with the rest of the country. There was a question, he said, whether the Federal Government should give more to the poorer than to the richer States.

The text of Mr. Roosevelt's statement follows:

It will be exactly four years ago on the fourteenth day of this month that I signed the original social security act. As I indicated at that time and on various occasions since that time, we must expect a great program of social legislation such as is represented in the social security act to be improved and strengthened in the light of additional experience and understanding. These amendments to the act represent another tremendous step forward in providing greater security for the people of this country. This is especially true in the case of the Federal old-age insurance system which has now been converted into a system of old-age life-time family securit, instead of only individual old-age security to the workers in insured occupations. In addition to the worker himself, millions of widows and orphans will now be afforded some degree of protection in the event of his death whether before or after his retirement.

Traffic Camera Gets Goods on 3; They Pay Fines

Confronted yesterday with pictorial evidence they were speeding, three motorists waived all arguments and pleaded guilty.

Sergt. L. T. Johnson, Traffic Bureau, took into the courtroom pictures from a new traffic camera. They showed the tag numbers of the speeding automobiles and the speedometer reading of Johnson's pursuing car.

Mrs. Evelyn S. Windsor, 31, of 3224 Walbridge place northwest, was accused of driving 38 miles an hour on Connecticut avenue. She was fined $5. Miss Frances Carter, 26, of 3231 Reservoir road northwest, was fined $10 for traveling at 45 miles an hour on the Taft Bridge.

The third defendant, Theodore R. Clark, 23, of 603 Kastle place northeast, was accused of second offense speeding, 35 miles, on Thirteenth street northwest. He paid a $10 fine.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 11 (AP).—Spirit Lake, Idaho, a village of 900 persons, was reported a blazing inferno tonight.

A brisk wind whipped to life the dying embers of a nearby forest fire that had threatened the town since Saturday.

Huge Plane Hurtles 200 Feet in Flames; Fate of First Flying Fortress Recalled

Special Dispatch to The Post

Langley Field, Va. Aug. 11.—Nine Army fliers were killed here today when their twin-motored bomber crashed and burned a few seconds after they had taken off, the controls believed locked in neutral position.

The pilot, who received his Air Corps commission just a week ago, had flown the 2-ton Douglas bomber only 200 feet from the ground when it swung on its side and dove into the ground. The big ship was wrapped in flames immediately.

First reports were that blocks used to lock the ailerons and elevator in neutral position when the plane is at rest were not removed before it started off. In that case the pilot would have found himself unable to control the big craft once it had lifted itself from the ground.

1935 Crash Recalled

The disaster was reminiscent of that October 30, 1935, at Dayton, Ohio, when the first of the Army's Flying Fortresses crashed and burned, killing Maj. P. P. Hill and injuring four companions. Investigation at that time showed members of the crew had failed to unlock control surfaces on the tail before taking the air.

The Flying Fortress climbed steeply after taking off, stalled and fell off on one wing, crashed and burned.

Witnesses to today's accident said the side-slipping wing dug deep in hard ground a few yards from open water, forming a pivot on which the fuselage swung round.

Fuel Tanks Split Open

The shock split open the wing-contained fuel tanks. Friction sparks, an open ignition switch or red-hot engine exhausts, did the rest. Flames roared in columns 100 feet high.

The post's fire apparatus and "crash wagons," equipped with stretchers and first-aid materials, raced to the spot, but intense heat precluded approaching the pyre, fed by hundreds of gallons of high-octane gasoline.

An hour after fire hose had cooled the melted, twisted metal, enlisted men took the bodies from the cabin to an improvised morgue at the post hospital.

At the controls on the take-off, Army records showed, was Second Lieut. Homer Mackay, 26, unmarried, who entered the Army as a flying cadet a year ago, was graduated at the Army training center, San Antonio, Tex., last June 9 and was commissioned two weeks ago.

Roster of the Dead

Killed with him were:

Lieut. Thomas Lee Butner, Air Corps Reserve, co-pilot, 1038 Somerset street, Prospect Hills, Roanoke, Va.

William Morgan, 44, technical staff sergeant, Langley Field.

Raymond J. Shelley, 41, staff sergeant, Buckroe Beach, Va.

Howard A. Jauernig, 39, staff sergeant, Meridian, Idaho.

Roy B. Leopold, 23, private, East Mauch Chunk, Pa.

Lieut. Mackay, a native of Paris, Ont., became a naturalized American citizen, studied aviation at his home, Lansing, Mich., and passed the rigorous tests admitting him to basic and advanced Army training courses in June, 1938.

The bomber, powered by two 1,000-horsepower Wright Cyclone engines, was of the B-18-A type, of which the Air Corps purchased more than 200 from Douglas Aircraft Coporation, of Santa Monica, Calif., during 1936-37.

Ribbentrop, Ciano Confer On Danzig

Nazis Call Salzburg Talks Warning To War Makers

By the United Press.

Salzburg, Germany, Aug. 11.—Foreign ministers of Germany and Italy conferred here today in what Nazis described as "a warning to those who play with thoughts of war" and arranged to meet tomorrow with Fuehrer Hitler at his Berchtesgaden retreat.

German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and Italian Foreign Minister Ciano—who drafted the Italo-German military alliance—will travel to the Fuehrer's Bavarian mountain-top chalet to report Saturday.

Meanwhile, Ciano was in telephone communication with Premier Mussolini to inform him of the progress of the Salzburg talks dealing with the Danzig question, the prospects of bringing Japan into the Italo-German arms pact and "axis" relations with Hungary and Jugoslavia.

The two foreign ministers completed their talks late today in ancient Fuschl Castle perched in the Schoberberg Mountains at the northern end of Lake Fuschl, and prepared to leave for "White Horse Inn," made famous by the operetta of that name, en route to Berchtesgaden.

Informed Nazis said no extreme significance should be attached to

Prizes Are Offered In Staunton Area 'Great Snake Hunt'

Special Dispatch to The Post

Staunton, Va., Aug. 11.—In an effort to curtail the number of game-killing reptiles, this section's first annual "Great Snake Hunt" will be conducted the latter part of this month.

Sportsmen's organizations, Staunton merchants, Boy Scouts and individuals are falling in line. All boys and girls 18 years and under are eligible to enter the snake-killing contest, for which valuable awards will be made, including guns, ammunition, money, etc. Classes will include the most snakes killed, the largest snake, with second and third prizes being awarded.

This time was selected because streams are usually low and water snakes and other species are more readily rounded up and killed.

55-Mile Winds Hit East Florida

Palm Beach, Fla., Aug. 11 (AP).—Blustery winds at times reaching nearly 55 miles an hour caused minor property damage and kicked up heavy waves in the Atlantic and Lake Okeechobee tonight.

Damage was confined to blown down signs, loosened roofing, fallen power poles and some injury to citrus trees.

Two persons suffered slight injuries caused indirectly by the storm, which moved inland from the Atlantic in the vicinity of Jupter late this afternoon.

The Weather Bureau at Jacksonville said the storm would pass into the gulf late tonight near Tampa with diminished intensity.

Roosevelt to Call Congress If War Breaks Out Abroad

Congressmen Scout Probability of Serious Crisis

Administration supporters on both House and Senate Foreign Affairs committees yesterday predicted the President would win his neutrality objectives at a special session if a general war breaks in Europe, but discounted the probability of such a crisis or an extra session.

"If there should be a world war, the neutrality act wouldn't last two minutes," said Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Com-

British to Yield 4 Chinese to Japan to Try

Shelter Given Them Provoked the Blockade Of Tientsin Area

London, Aug. 11.—With events in Europe demanding most of its attention, the British government today made a move toward the "appeasement" of Japan by deciding to surrender for trial the four Chinese who have been sheltered in the British concession at Tientsin, thereby provoking the Japanese blockade of the area, and widespread anti-British agitation in North China.

The four men accused of complicity in the murder last April of S. G. Cheng, manager of the Federal Reserve Bank and superintendent of customs at Tientsin, had been detained by British Municipal Police on the ground that local Japanese authorities had failed to supply legally founded evidence of their prima facie implication in the crime.

Month after month the British police, backed by the government at London, refused to give up the Chinese. Finally, a few weeks ago the Japanese submitted "additional evidence" against them. This was forwarded to London in confidence by Sir Robert Craigie, British Ambassador to Tokyo.

Today the British announced that a prima facie case had been made

Parking Meter Extension in D. C. Vetoed

President Observes Language of Act Defeats Objectives

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 11.—President Roosevelt today vetoed a bill authorizing District Commissioners to purchase additional parking meters for the National Capital.

The President said he had no objections to the purpose of the bill, but believed "provisions as to the manner in which meters may be secured and funds made available for their payment are sufficiently vague and ambiguous to render the measure inoperative."

Wants Fees In Fund

The President added he would not object to future legislation, providing all fees collected from meters be deposited to the credit of the District of Columbia gasoline tax, motor vehicle fees and highway fund, with "authorization for the submission of estimates of appropriations, payable from such fund, for the purchase and installation of meters."

President Roosevelt signed three other District bills, one amending the real estate brokers' act to reduce fees and clarify certain language, the second authorizing the Commissioners to issue regulations on com-

D. C. Father of 10 Arrested In Shotgun Slaying of Neighbor

Richard Johnson Colton, the 59-year-old father of ten children, a former WPA worker but now unemployed, was held last night by police, who said he admitted to the fatal shooting of a neighbor. He was held without charge pending action of a coroner's inquest today.

The dead man is Joseph A. McKenna, 42, a telegrapher, who died almost instantly from a shotgun blast which tore open the back of his head.

Acording to police, McKenna, who was married and lived at 3549 Thirteenth street northwest, had stepped out of his home with his sister, Mrs. Francis J. Reuter, of 3620 Sixteenth street northwest.

Police said Mrs. Reuter told them she saw Colton, who lives at 3579 Thirteenth street northwest, approach with a gun, and screamed to her brother to "duck."

Policemen J. C. Daniels and L. T. Parker, of the Tenth Precinct, were called to the scene by Mrs. Reuter, who fled inside her brother's home and telephoned for aid. While Parker stayed with the dying man, Daniels entered Colton's home. He reported that he found Colton in the living room, with a 12-guage shot gun in a corner. One shell was discharged.

Taken to the Tenth Precinct Station, Colton was quoted by police as admitting to the shooting. Later, at headquarters where he was examined at length, Colton said, in a signed statement, he did not remember anything that transpired between the time he was in his backyard watching his family play croquet and when he found himself in the police station.

Najera Disowns Compromiseon U. S. Oil Lands

Mexico Stands Pat On Majority Control; News Story Scotched

By Robert C. Albright

Negotiations for settlement of the controversy over Mexican expropriation of American oil properties received a sharp setback last night, when the Mexican government repudiated a compromise plan and reverted to the demands for majority control, in operation of the properties.

The American companies previously had rejected the compromise proposal, authorship of which was denied both by oil company negotiators and the Mexican government. It proposed a board of nine directors to administer the properties, three to be named by the stockholders, three by Mexico, and three to be neutrals.

Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador, said last night the plan has been under study by Mexico but is receiving no further consideration. Najera's announcement followed a published statement by W. D. Parish, president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, that neither the companies nor their representatives have deviated during the negotiations from objectives agreed upon at the outset.

Mexico Stands Pat

"The statement by Mr. Parish," said the Mexican Ambassador, "shows that the companies persist in their determination to impose an inadvisable and impractical plan; this intransigeant attitude relieves the Mexican government from the necessity to continue studying the proposals referred to by the press, and to uphold those offered on August 2, 1939, to the companies by their representatives."

Najera revealed for the first time that the last Mexican proposals handed to Donald Richberg, counsel for the companies, on August 2, called for appointment of the majority of the members of the board of directors and of the manager, exclusively by the Mexican government. He said the Mexican government now stands on that plan.

As the American companies have similarly demanded majority control, the Mexican embassy's announcement left negotiations in a deadlock and threatened with termination.

With both the Mexican government and the oil companies denying authorship of the so-called compromise, now in the discard, speculation turned on reports that it may have been put forward unofficially by the state department itself.

The five objectives on which the companies had agreed to negotiate through Richberg recognized Mexico's right to expropriate upon payment of adequate compensation, but provided for restoration of management to the companies, Mexican guarantees that compensation would be made, and company guarantees of adequate wages and reasonable royalties and taxes.

News Story Irks Mexico

Ambassador Najera said his government had accepted this basis for discussion "in a spirit of conciliation" and declared Richberg had informed him the companies proposed it "as an elastic frame which could include the viewpoints of the Mexican government."

"From the beginning of the negotiations," the Ambassador said, "my government has firmly maintained its determination to manage and operate the oil industry, this being a condition without which no settlement could be effected."

Najera referred to a story published in New York that the so-called neutral control compromise had been found unacceptable to the old companies at a conference Thursday. The news story called it "Mexico's new proposal." Najera denied "most emphatically that my government offered such proposals, although I admit the existence of a plan embodying them.

"In a telegram dated August 9, 1939, Mr. Richberg informed me about the conference between the officials of the companies and himself, stating that he could not accept the responsibility for further discussions except as directly authorized by clients," said the Ambassador's statement.

"I answered his telegram the same day, saying that I would receive instructions from my government this morning (August 11). It is, therefore, surprising that Mr. Parish published his statement before Mr. Richberg, who has always been extremely courteous, would inform me about the decision of the companies regarding the continuation or suspension of the negotiations."

Compromise Plan Abandoned

Najera declared he had "good grounds to suppose" the companies furnished details of the counter-proposals to the press, as his own government has made no statement concerning them.

"This attitude is a further source of surprise because I must insist the Mexican government had not yet expressed any opinion thereon and was studying the possibility of introducing amendments compatible with its own views to present a modified plan which might guarantee the companies' interests without fundamentally altering the principles maintained by the Mexican government."

These studies, he said, the Mexican government now has abandoned and is returning to its August 2 proposals, said to be even more unacceptable to the oil concerns.

U. S. and Canada To Aid Air Lines

Ottawa, Aug. 11 (Canadian Press). An agreement to clear the way for exchanging air line services was drafted today by representatives of the United States and Canada, to be submitted to the two governments for ratification.

The conferees said it was intended "to stimulate and promote sound economic development of air services" and remove barriers to over-the-border operation for lines of both countries.

It was undertsood the agreement would remove difficulties of Canadian companies seeking to operate to such cities as New York, Buffalo, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago and Boston, and of United States lines serving Canadian points.

they paid cash for them and transported them in other than American vessels.

The President disclosed at a press conference his last official act tomorrow before he leaves his family estate for a sea-going vacation will be to confer by telephone with the State Department. He gave no indication of the nature of the telephone conference, but State Department officials have been keeping him posted on day-by-day developments in the potential war theaters of the Old World and in Asia.

Work Almost Completed

Virtually completing the mass of work left him by adjournment of Congress, Mr. Roosevelt reviewed in a press conference the possibility of a special session of Congress in event of war.

During the day, he disposed of all but 15 of the 659 bills which Congress approved.

Seated in the small study of his Hyde Park home, Mr. Roosevelt spoke gravely of the possibility of a war in Europe or Asia. He said that if an actual war crisis develops—that is, if war appears to be reasonably certain—he will call Congress back to enact legislation to preserve United States neutrality on a basis of international law.

Mr. Roosevelt said, however, that he knows no reason, as of today—August 11—which should cause him to recall the Congress, which defeated his neutrality program and allowed mandatory arms embargos against belligerents to remain in effect.

Cites Other Methods

Mr. Roosevelt was asked if the program he would present to such a special session would involve repeal of the mandatory arms embargo. He said that what he sought generally at the last session was to make the United States neutral instead of un-neutral by relying upon basic tenets of international law. He emphasized that he still stands firmly for the objectives of the cash-and-carry policy, but there are many methods other than legislative for arriving at an objective.

He had no further statement to add to his message to the Young Democrats' national convention in Pittsburgh last night, in which he said he would be unable to participate actively in the 1940 Presidential election if the party picked a "conservative or lip-service candidate."

He said the words he had used in that message were very carefully chosen and were plain, simple English. They were designed to speak for themselves, he said, so that nothing could be read into them which was not there.

The temporary White House listed 52 bills which the President signed today and 11 vetoed. Major signed bills included:

Authorizing the sale of surplus agricultural commodities.

Amending the Panama Canal Zone code regulation for computing annuities.

rity program, he added, his Administration "would go down in history as one of the great landmarks of progress."

This program, he continued, had been improved by the recent amendments adopted by Congress, but he believed there was room for further improvements.

Security System Incomplete

"The social security system is, of course, incomplete," he continued. "It will be strengthened and enlarged often in the years to come.

"As it stands today, it contains obvious gaps, which undoubtedly will be filled in the near future. I refer, for example, to provision for economic loss due to disability and for public health and medical care. In addition, there is still work to do on the great problem of old-age security."

In expanding the system, he said, care should be taken to preserve a fair balance.

"But," he went on, "we have the productive capacity to assure that nobody remains in want, that every child and every youth has his chance for good health and for an education that stimulates his own capacities, that every able-bodied person shall have a chance to earn a decent livelihood, that every citizen whose life's work is done shall be able to retire in comfort and decency."

If handled with courageous wisdom, he said, this "broad program of social security will contribute to our success in the other great tasks of modern liberalism which I have mentioned."

After devoting the first half of his prepared address to a definition of modern liberalism, McNutt elaborated on his three-point goal to assert:

"We liberals of today reject, alike, class warfare and class distinction. We recognize differences in individuals talents, differences in occupation—yes. But we repudiate the notion that any kind of useful work is less dignified, less becoming to a citizen, than any other kind, just as we repudiate the equally undemocratic notion that any group, or class, is endowed with a superior right to govern. Our aim is a concern of interests based on social and economic justice."

Barkley said anyone who thought the New Deal program would be repudiated by the 1940 convention should have his head examined.

Burke Sees Break

Omaha, Nebr., Aug. 11 (AP).—Sweeping political change in 1940, with President Roosevelt breaking away from Democratic ranks to form a new "liberal" party, were foreseen today by Senator Edward R. Burke, vigorous anti-New Deal Nebraska Democrat.

Burke, who figured in a last minute clash on the Senate floor with New Dealers, returned to his home here to predict "conservative" Democrats and Republicans would unite after the national conventions, leaving the President to head a new group.

Court Upholds Roosevelt on Morgan Ouster

Power to Appoint Declared to Include Power to Remove

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 11 (AP).—Federal Judge George C. Taylor dismissed today Dr. Arthur E. Morgan's suit challenging the right of President Roosevelt to remove him as chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Judge Taylor held that Mr. Roosevelt "has the power of removal as an incident to the power of appointment."

Morgan, who was ousted from the TVA chairmanship by the President for "contumacy," contended his "attempted removal" was "void, invalid and wholly without authority." He asked back salary of $2,961.66 from the time of his removal, March 22, 1938, until the suit was filed.

Refused to Give Facts

Morgan, former president of Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio, maintained that Mr. Roosevelt had no authority to remove him "for the reason that such removal could be accomplished only by a concurrent resolution of the Senate and House as provided in said (TVA) act."

His dismissal followed his refusal to heed the President's request for facts to substantiate charges against his former associates, Directors David E. Lilienthal and Harcourt A. Morgan.

Dr. Morgan accused Lilienthal and Harcourt Morgan of hampering his efforts to secure "honesty, decency and fairness" in the administration of the Government agency and in turn was charged by them with seeking to "rule or ruin" the TVA.

Roosevelt's Reasons

Mr. Roosevelt in his letter of dismissal to Dr. Morgan wrote that the removal was for "openly making grave and libelous charges of dishonesty and want of authority" against Lilienthal and H. A. Morgan, "obstructing the work of the TVA" and for "refusing to submit" to his demands for facts to support the charges.

The White House inquiry into the TVA family quarrel was followed by a joint congressional investigation which resulted in a majority report giving the agency a clean bill of health. A Republican minority, however, accused the authority of being "wasteful and inefficient."

To succeed Dr. Morgan on the TVA board the President appointed former Senator James P. Pope, of Idaho. Dr. H. A. Morgan was named chairman and Lilienthal vice chairman.

Len Broughton, attorney for the former chairman, said the case would be appealed.

First Lady Calls For Sympathy In Youth Problems

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt yesterday charged the United States with making its young people "feel that they are a burden and a problem" and "that we do not know what to do with them."

Certain other governmetns have been "more intelligent than we have been" in taking care of their youth problems, she said. Communities, and not schools, she added, are at fault in not providing programs of useful pursuits for young people and which would give them a feeling of responsibility toward their local and national governments.

At the same time, Mrs. Roosevelt, in an article in the Democratic Digest, defended the right of married women to work where additional money was needed to provide an adequate standard of living.

Although asserting she could find sympathy for two members of the same family being on the Government pay roll if the money was needed to maintain a home, Mrs. Roosevelt significantly added:

"It is important, however, not to create a family bureaucracy in Government."

Telegraphers Seek Pay Arbitration

The Commercial Telegraphers Union, with headquarters at 901 Massachusetts avenue northwest, sued in District Court yesterday to require the Western Union Telegraph Co. to arbitrate differences over wages, hours and working conditions.

The union's complaint, drafted by Attorney Hugh C. McKenny, said the company has refused to refer the disputes to an arbitrator.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 11 (AP).—John Young Brown, of Lexington, today conceded the Democratic nomination of Lieut. Gov. Keen Johnson, of Richmond, for Governor in last Saturday's primary.

In a telegram to Johnson, Brown said:

"I have always supported the nominees of the Democratic Party and I shall not at this time deviate from my allegiance to my party."

Contracts Let By Navy on 5 Pacific Bases

Construction Cost Put At 14 Millions; 12 Ports Authorized

By the Associated Press

The Navy ordered work started yesterday on five Pacific island air bases with award of construction contracts estimated to total $14,607,500.

The bases are Midway, Johnston and Palmyra islands, Kaneche Bay and Pearl Harbor, both on the Hawaiian Island of Oahu.

Congress authorized 12 naval air bases last session and appropriated $85,000,000 for their construction in the next two or three years. The Navy's announcement indicated the new Pacific works would be accelerated beyond the others.

2 Bills Signed

The bills bearing on the Nation's security were signed by President Roosevelt yesterday. One authorizes an expenditure of $277,000,000 on a third set of locks for the Panama Canal—of which no more than $15,000,000 may be appropriated in the current fiscal year—and the other facilitates the exchange of surplus American farm products for reserve stocks of strategic materials produced abroad.

Meanwhile, the extent to which American manufacturers are helping France rearm was emphasized when the State Department disclosed that export licenses for the shipment of $35,419,372.48 worth of war materials to that nation were issued in July.

The total, which represented aircraft purchases almost exclusively, set a peace-time record for foreign purchases of American war supplies in any one month.

In issuing the arms export report for July, the State Department noted that an American company sold an autogiro to Japan despite a "moral embargo" placed on such shipments by Secretary Hull.

Included Parts

The company mentioned is the Kellett Autogiro Corporation, Philadelphia. The sale, which included two spare wheel assemblies as well as the autogiro, amounted to $32,100.

The department recalled that on July 1, 1938, it had announced that it would regret to have to issue any licenses for export of aircraft to countries whose armed forces "are making use of airplanes for attack upon civilian populations."

France absorbed practically all the licenses issued in July, accounting for $35,419,372.48 of a total to all countries of $39,920,738.17.

For the first seven months of this year, arms export licenses have been issued totaling $112,026,044.70.

31 Millions for Warplanes

Of France's total for the month, military airplanes accounted for $31,523,300 and civil aircraft engines and parts for practically all the remainder.

Great Britain's licenses for July were down to $75,401.79, but the arms report showed more planes actually have been delivered to her this year than to France.

Actual exports to Great Britain in July totaled $5,694,900.12, making a total for the seven months of $20,705,095.24, compared with France's exports in July of $3,030,560, and for the seven months, $12,218,117.18.

The July tabulation included another license for Japan for the exportation of one Douglas Model DC-4 airplane valued at $725,000, sold by the Douglas Aircraft Co., but the State Department pointed out that this contract was entered into on March 1, 1938, and said, "it will be noted that this contract antedated the statement of the Secretary (Hull) referred to above."

In a statement about the Panama Canal bill, President Roosevelt said construction of a third set of locks "will enhance not only our own security but that of this hemisphere."

He said he proposed, however, to ask Congress to amend the present law "so as to bring it into conformity with the commitments entered into with Panama, which pledge to the citizens of Panama opportunity and treatment in employment in the canal administration and the Panama Railroad Co. equal to that offered to citizens of the United States."

A provision of the locks bill, he said, stated that all new personnel engaged in construction work, occupying skilled, technical, clerical, administrative and supervisory positions, must be United States citizens.

Taylor Urges Economy, Cites 13Billion Spent

U. S. Can't Wait for Income to Increase, Says House Leader

Chairman Edward T. Taylor of the House Appropriations Committee yesterday coupled a strong plea for economy with final tabulations placing the last session's appropriation figure at $13,349,020,564, a peacetime record.

"Contraction of Federal outlays must be brought about and brought about soon," said the 81-year-old chairman of the major House committee. He continued:

"We cannot wait upon the growth of national income. We must lay a course that will meet it along its upward climb, which I confidently predict. America has bested every problem in the past, and I have abiding faith in her ability to maintain that record."

Defends Increased Funds

Taylor questioned whether Congress would have been "justified" in the last session in denying increased defense appropriations and additional funds for the farmers, but declared "there is nobody more ready than I to admit that we cannot long continue to live beyond our income."

Defending armament outlays, Taylor asked whether "in the face of world conditions, in the face of the rearmament race going forward in other lands, should Congress have turned a deaf ear to building up our defense establishments?"

He also questioned whether Congress, "with foreign and domestic markets for agriculture all awry," should have withheld aid from the farmers.

Farm Cure Not Found

"True, it may be said that aid in this way is not conducive to bringing about a state of independence or a measure of independence," he said. "Admittedly, we have not found the right way to cure our agricultural ills."

He said farmers would welcome any method solving their problem, but "none has been advanced thus far, to my knowledge, and I say to those who are prone to criticize, that the solution is not solely a Congressional prerogative."

Taylor advanced the belief solution of "our difficulties" is not wholly domestic. He said commerce is "out of joint" throughout the world because of wars, threatened wars and war preparations, and "we must look beyond our shores for an improved order of things if we would have a complete and earlier approach to normalcy."

Normal Trade Disrupted

"Normal trade is disrupted and that reacts in curtailed production which, in turn, means less need for raw materials, less use for transportation systems, less employment, less buying power, less demand for farm products," Taylor said.

"I express the hope our statesmen will be continually alert to take advantage of any opening which may offer promise of a pacific adjustment of differences between other world powers, to the end that existing conflicts may be speedily terminated, threatened conflicts avoided, normal intercourse restored, and that the vast outlays being poured into armaments may be diverted into commerce such as it common between nations when at peace."

Taylor's estimate of a $13,349,020,564 appropriations total for the session included annual and permanent appropriations, and exceeded by $1,231,000,000 the $12,118,036,335 he said was apropriated by the preceding session.

Challenges Taber Estimate

The House Appropriations chairman challenged the $14,061,598,619 estimate of Representative Taber, of New York, ranking Republican member of his committee, which included contractual authorizations and reappropriations. Taylor said authority to contract for additional obligations have no place in an appropriations statement for the session, and reappropriations as well have "no place in any table comparing appropriations for one year with another," unless the amounts reappropriated are deducted from the sums charged to the Congress that voted them.

He said a further distinction must be drawn between "appropriations" and "expenditures," contending appropriated funds are "potential expenditures," but their actual expenditure often extends beyond the year in which appropriated.

D. C. Reinstates Privilege Tax Office Workers

Workers in the old business privilege tax office, who have been toiling "on faith" since July 1, when the tax died, yesterday were reinstated by the Commissioners and will receive their back pay as well as form the nucleus for the new income tax division.

Twenty-six employes were affected by the order, which was made possible after the President signed the last deficiency bill containing an allotment of $47,280 for the salaries.

The staff will wind up affairs on the administration of delinquent privilege taxes, reassessments and accounting and then will join a number of men from the assessor's office to establish the new income tax division.

Allan F. Brooke, administrator of the business privilege tax, is the leading choice to head the new division.

Murray Urges Job Parley of Business, Labor

C. I. O. Leader Suggests Roosevelt Summon Groups to Conference

By the United Press

In a nation-wide Labor Department broadcast, Philip Murray, vice president of the C. I. O., last night urged President Roosevelt to summon business, Government and labor leaders to a national conference to solve the unemployment problem, which, he said threatens the American form of government.

Murray said "unemployment is America's No. 1 social, economic and political problem," and declared that "failure to solve it constructively might very well rock the foundations of our Government."

Lubin Questions Powers

Isador Lubin, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics participating in the broadcast, asked Murray whether he supposed that Mr. Roosevelt "has the necessary powers to summon people to such a conference."

"Well, if he hasn't," Murray replied, "then let Congress give him the necessary powers.

"This conference might solve the unemployment problem either through a collective agreement between these three groups to put people back to work, or by a coordinated legislative program worked out by Government, industry and labor to be presented at the reconvened session of Congress this winter."

Thomas Urges Peace

[Earlier yesterday a plea for a "working agreement" between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., even though they maintain their separate entities, was made by Chairman Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, of the Senate Labor Committee, the Associated Press reported.

[Summing up the 53 days of hearings by the committee on proposed changes in the Wagner act, Thomas told reporters he saw no reason why the two labor organizations should have to get together as one.

["There is plenty of room in this country for both of them," he said, "but the leaders must strive for some working agreement so that the cause of labor will not be hurt by strife.

["I am inclined to believe the strife will end of its own free will. President William Green testified before our committee that it hadn't hurt his organization and that its membership was actually growing under it. We all know that the C. I. O. has grown, for it started from practically nothing.

["When Green and John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O., begin to get thoughtful about the gains they have made, all this other business will go out of the window."]

A.F.L. Outlaws Stoppage of Building Work

Jurisdiction Disputes Of Crafts Will Not Delay Construction

No stoppage of work will occur henceforth when American Federation of Labor building crafts quarrel over which shall do a specific job, it was announced yesterday.

The announcement was made after the labor relations committee of the Associated General Contractors of America and the building and construction trades department of the American Federation of Labor had reached an "understanding" at the A. F. L. convention in Atlantic City.

Edward J. Harding, managing director of the Associated General Contractors, said here after his return from Atlantic City that the understanding was "a co-operative achievement outstanding in the history of the labor relations movement in the construction industry."

Thousands Return to Jobs

The understanding, he said, "should clear the way for a badly needed increase in private construction. Without a return to normal of private construction volume, prosperity cannot come to this country."

John Coyne, of Washington, newly elected president of the Building Trades Department, said yesterday that work had been resumed throughout the country on about 300 building jobs, affecting between 15,000 and 20,000 men. By Monday, he added, work would be resumed on all jobs tied up by jurisdictional strikes.

The consequence of jurisdictional disputes, construction men said, were graphically illustrated in Washington at the time the Labor Department Building was erected. The specifications called for a metal moulding in the rooms. The metal moulders claimed the job. Carpenters argued that since the metal was merely a substitute for wood moulding, they ought to get the job.

Stoppage Would Be Outlawed

This dispute lasted for several weeks. In the end both lost. The specifications were scrapped, and painters were employed to draw a stripe around the rooms in lieu of molding. Under the agreement announced yesterday, such a delay would be outlawed. The work would be done by the craft in possession at the time a stoppage was threatened, and the merits of the quarrel would be decided by the president of the A. F. of L. building trades department.

Commenting on the agreement, Harding said:

"During the depression every construction workman was seeking the maximum opportunity for employment, and as new materials and new methods for which jurisdiction had not been determined in the past were used on the job, each craft which could perform the work sought that opportunity of employment and frequently walked off the job to enforce their demands. The action of the executive council yesterday means that these demands will be adjudicated by the impartial president of the department, and work shall proceed pending such decision.

Investors' Interests Protected

"To the investor in construction, both private and public, this action means that he may go ahead with his construction without fear of delays and waste which would result from stoppage of work from this cause."

Harding said negotiations looking to such an understanding had been under way for several months. He expressed the opinion the advent of the C. I. O. in the construction field recently was not an influencing factor.

A. D. Lewis, brother of the C. I. O. chieftain and head of the new C. I. O. Construction Workers Organizing Committee, said of the new agreement, "Very interesting, even if it did take them 50 years to wake up."

Texas Bad Man Of 16 Aliases New Public Enemy No. 1

New York, Aug. 11 (AP).—Irving Charles (Charlie) Chapman, a little Texas bad man with cold blue eyes, an itching trigger finger and 16 aliases, was designated by the Department of Justice today as new public enemy No. 1.

In a list of the country's ten most sought missing men, issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in connection with the Government's current nationally-co-ordinated anticrime campaign, Charlie's name led.

Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, termed by Thomas E. Dewey, New York county district attorney, the most dangerous industrial racketeer at large, had the relatively obscure fourth place on the Federal roster of infamy.

A Statement

An article carried in The Washington Post under the date of August 9, concerning the settlement of litigation to which Mrs. William Livingston Crounse was a party, was obscure on points which might be interpreted as being unfair to Mrs. Crounse. A. K. Shipe, attorney for Mrs. Crounse, states that it would clear up any misunderstanding to state that the drugs taken by Mrs. Crounse prior to her marriage to Joseph Whitla Stinson were administered to her and that the nature of these drugs was the usual sleeping potions of the barbituric group. Mr. Shipe further points out that testimony in the case proves that there is no evidence even remotely to indicate that Mrs. Crounse voluntarily took or used any of the drugs referred to by the court.

Any settlement made by attorneys, following the decision by Justice Luhring annulling the marriage of Mrs. Crounse and Mr. Stinson, was the result of agreement by attorneys.

The fact is that Mrs. Crounse won her annulment, regained her property, and all matters connected with the litigation have been amicably settled. It was not the intention of The Post to infer otherwise.

The only purpose of this statement is to be fair to Mrs. Crounse in case any statement in the August 9 article was open to misinterpretation.

Pope Elevates 7 D. C. Priests To Prelacy

19 in Archdiocese Honored; Dr. Shehan Is Papal Chamberlain

Seven local clerics are among 19 priests of the Archdiocese of Baltimore recently elevated by Pope Pius XII to the domestic prelacy of the papal household, according to a copyrighted article in this week's issue of the Catholic Review.

They are the Rev. Thomas G. Smyth, pastor of the Shrine of the Blessed Sacrament; the Rev. Dr. John M. Cooper, professor of anthropology at Catholic University; the Rev. John W. Dowling, rector of Holy Name Church; the Rev. Edward P. McAdams, of St. Joseph's Church; the Rev. Charles R. O'Hara, of Holy Comforter Church; the Rev. James A. Smyth, pastor of the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, and the Rev. Louis C. Vaeth, archdiocesan director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith and pastor of Our Lady of Victory Church.

Two other priests, the Rev. Dr. Lawrence J. Shehan, director of Catholic Charities of Washington, and the Rev. Dr. F. Joseph Manns, assistant chancellor of the diocese, have been named papal chamberlains.

According to the Catholic Review, the number of priests thus honored is the largest in the history of the archdiocese. While it is not known when the new monsignori will be invested, it is thought Archbishop Michael J. Curley may hold a mass investiture in the Baltimore Cathedral or that he may invest the new prelates in their respective churches.

The office of domestic prelate of the papal household carries with it the title of right reverend and that of papal chamberlain the title of very reverend. Both confer the right to be addressed as monsignor.

Others Elevated

Others elevated to the rank of domestic prelate are:

The Rev. Joseph M. Nelligan, chancellor of the archdiocese and formerly assistant to Bishop McNamara at St. Gabriel's Church here; the Rev. Dr. John I. Barrett, archdiocesan superintendent of education and pastor of St. Katherine's Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Robert J. Achstetter, pastor of SS. Philip and James Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Edward L. Leonard, pastor of St. Bernard's Church in Baltimore and formerly archdiocesan director of Catholic Charities.

Also, the Very Rev. William E. Mackessy, pastor of St. Cecelia's Church and formerly assistant chancellor of the archdiocese, elevated from papal chamberlain; the Rev. Charles F. Morrissey, pastor of St. Ann's Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Philip B. McGuire, pastor of St. Vincent's Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Lawrence J. McNamara, pastor of St. Brigid's Church, Baltimore; the Rev. Louis O'Donovan, pastor of St. Martin's Church, Baltimore.

Also, the Very Rev. Harry A. Quinn, rector of the Basilica of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, elevated from papal chamberlain; the Rev. Antonio Scarpati, pastor of St. Peter in Chains Church, Westernport, and the Rev. William A. Toolen, pastor of St. Edward's Church, Baltimore.

Mrs. Rosenberg Wins $250 a Month Alimony on Plea

Mrs. Betty Rosenberg, 37, 4723 Fourth street northwest, yesterday was awarded $250 a month temporary alimony on her plea she lived "like a charwoman," despite her husband's alleged income of $8,000 a year.

Mrs. Rosenberg's suit for a limited divorce is pending in the District Court. She charged that for 20 years she lived in penury "in her own home," although her husband, Meyer Rosenberg, of 4007 Fourteenth street northwest, had property worth $200,000.

Attorneys Alvin L. Newmyer and Lewis H. Shapiro emphasized Mrs. Rosenberg's claim her husband allowed her only $19.50 for household expenses, and reduced this when he ate a meal away from home. Former District Attorney Leo A. Rover, counsel for Rosenberg, denied the charges.

Mendelssohn's Famous Dutch Bank Suspends

Closes 2 Days After Death of Director, Fritz Mannheimer

By the United Press

Amsterdam, Netherlands, Aug. 11. The international private bank of Mendelssohn & Co. today announced suspension of payments on its obligations, only two days after the death in France of its multimillionaire director, Fritz Mannheimer.

The difficulties of the world-famous bank, which caused a sharp flurry in financial markets of the world, were believed by informed circles to be due chiefly to a lack of liquid funds brought about by a gigantic conversion of about $265,000,000 in outstanding French state and railroad bonds.

Financial circles in Amsterdam felt, however, that given sufficient time the bank would be able to adjust its affairs satisfactorily.

Heart Attack Blamed

The bank announced suspension of all payments on obligations, 24 hours after receipt of news here of the death of Mannheimer on Wednesday in the Paris suburb of Vaucresson.

It had been reported earlier that the Amsterdam court had been petitioned to grant a letter of license—legalizing the suspension—but bank officials said no such application had been made thus far.

Dutch visitors who saw Mannheimer at his Paris home the day before his death said he looked quite healthy.

The announcement of the death of the 49-year-old financier who was known as "the king of flying capital" attributed death to a heart attack but many rumors as to the cause of his death caused French police to assert that death was natural.

Leaves Bride of 3 Months

He was buried in the rain today at Vaucresson with only a few mourners, including a handful of business associates and his bride of less than three months, the former Mlle. Marie Antoinette Jeanne Reiss, a Brazilian beauty.

Mendelssohn & Co., regarded by many as wielding more influence than the Rothschilds in recent years, was founded in Germany in the eighteenth century by the German philosopher, Moses Mendelssohn. The composer, Felix Mendelssohn, was a member of the same family.

So far as could be learned, only the Amsterdam house of Mendelssohn was affected by today's action.

Actors' Union Dispute Still Before Group

A. A. A. A.fl Accepts Delay in Decision by A. F. L. Council

By the United Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 11.—A delegation of weary, bedraggled Hollywood stars flew back to New York tonight with word from the executive council of the American Federation of Labor that no decision had yet been reached in their vital and bitter quarrel with the stage hands' union.

William Green, American Federation of Labor president, announced a committee appointed by the A. F. L. executive council to seek a way out of the dispute had made a partial report on its efforts of two days and had been directed to continue.

Nothing definite will be done until Monday, when the executive council returns from New York.

Delay Is Accepted

Ralph Morgan, president of the Screen Actors Guild, announced that, despite earlier demands for a decision within 24 hours, the Associated Actors and Artists of America had decided to accept the delay.

He and his associates, including Edward Arnold and Jean Muir, immediately boarded a plane for New York after Green made his announcement.

In New York, they will join the rest of the Hollywood delegation, which includes Mischa Auer, Binnie Barnes, Wayne Morris and Miriam Hopkins, and prepare to fly to Los Angeles tomorrow for a Sunday mass meeting of the S. A. G. membership.

Morgan, probably the world's wealthiest trade union official, since, in addition to his screen income, his family is heir to the Angostura Bitters fortune, said the actors had decided the dispute involved such "vital and terrific implications" that it would be wise to accept delay.

Believes Wait Justified

Asked if he thought it would be a futile delay, Morgan replied.

"I can't tell."

"The reports from our special committee, meeting with the A. F. L. special committee, he continued, "have led us to believe that we would be justified in waiting until Monday."

Officials of the A. A. A. A. will return here Monday to hear the anticipated decision. So will members of the opposing union, the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes, and probably officers of the American Federation of Actors, the union over whose charter the dispute rages.

The A. F. A. was expelled by its parent body, the A. A. A. A. and a charter issued to it by the I. A. T. S. E. The 4-A has contended this chartering of an expelled union was a violation of the A. F. of L. constitution.

Wide Strike Threatened

Green, in making his anouncement of the status of the dispute, in which such a strike has been threatened that all Hollywood studios and legitimate theaters would be forced to close, said the special committee "will continue its conference with a hope that something definite may be concluded."

The A. F. of L. executive council will take up the matter Monday, he continued.

Green, asked if the A. F. A. still was in the A. F. of L, refused to reply He denied a report the committee was considering the issuance of an international charter to the A. F. A., thereby setting it up independently, with jurisdiction over vaudeville and night club artists.

"There is no question of that, and it has never been discussed here," he said.

Communist Control Charged

Thus the problem remained unsolved after two days of bitter debate and acrimonious accusation, during which charges of Communist domination were hurled at the A. A. A. A. group by officers of the I. A. T. S. E. the stagehands' union.

The charges, Morgan said, were made yesterday, and were quickly denied. Morgan said Robert Montgomery, former president of the S. A. C., was named as a radical, an accusation Morgan termed "too far-fetched."

U. S. Probes Accounts of Missing Broker

Wife Describes Walk Into Ocean, Supposes He Jumped Into Sea

By the Associated Press

Salisbury, Md., Aug. 11.—Federal Bureau of Investigation agents probed investment brokerage records of William E. Dally, 63, today, while police pondered over their first coherent account of what they said may have been a double suicide pact.

The disappearance of Dally became more bizarre with discovery he married Irma Martha Lucy Voss at Denton, Md., June 4, 1938. License bore the notation he was divorced in Germany, 1923. Police believe he obtained the divorce from Mrs. William E. Dally, Chicago, without her knowledge.

Dr. M. H. Dally was en route to Salisbury in an effort to identify Dally as his father from photographs. His father was German representative for the International Harvester Co., last heard from in 1922, when he wrote asking for a divorce.

Wife Describes Plunge

Mrs. Irma Dally, 48, found on an Ocean City Beach Wednesday, told Sheriff J. William Hall today:

"My husband and I walked out on the north end of the jetty at Ocean City. He asked me to step into the water to see if it was deep.

"I climbed down from the inlet jetty into the water and waded out a little piece. My husband stood on the jetty ready to jump. Suddenly, I went into deep water over my head and I suppose my husband jumped in. I do not know.

"I think I swam around the inlet jetty and ashore. I do not know how I got on the shore west of the boardwalk."

Needed $6,000, She Says

Sheriff Hall added that, although Mrs. Dally did not say directly there had been a suicide pact, she told him "if somebody had let them have $6,000, she wouldn't be in this trouble."

F. B. I. investigators arrived late yesterday and began checking the records of the brokerage firm operated by Dally and his wife. The sign found on the door of their office, reading "Closed on account of death," was compared with the writing of Dally. They came to Salisbury in 1928.

War May Mean Special Session

mittee. "But I do not believe there is immediate danger of world war. I don't see any big crisis developing in Europe."

Chairman Bloom, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he had "no doubt that if Congress is called into extra session it would approve a real neutrality policy—or something we do not have in the present neutrality act."

Representative Luther Johnson, of Texas, ranking Democratic member Committee, said he thought Congress would "respond" if a serious ber of the House Foreign Affairs war crisis caused the President to call Congress back for repeal of the arms embargo.

But Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, author of the war referendum amendment, said he doubted if "things would be very much different" than last session, when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee postponed action on embargo repeal proposals.

Comment followed President Roosevelt's declaration at Hyde Park that if war developed in Europe or the Far East, he immediately will call Congress back in special session. The President added that he knows of no reason for calling Congress back before the regular session next January.

Study Japanese Ban

Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, meanwhile, said the State Department has taken under consideration the suggestion by Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, that the United States now has the legal means of stopping the flow of war materials to Japan for use against China.

Senator Thomas, author of the bill empowering the President to designate which of two or more belligerents was a treaty violator, so Congress could take embargo action, said the European war threat "was very different in 1914."

"Then everyone wanted to fight," said Thomas. "Now no one wants to fight, least of all Mr. Hitler."

Thomas Sees Modification

Thomas said that "if things go along as they now are going in Europe, what adjustments are made by Congress in the neutrality act will be made a little at a time, with the present act being modified gradually." He said these changes may largely depend on what transpires in Europe and in the Far East. He said he still strongly favored repeal of the arms embargo, as recommended by the President, but opposed power for the President to establish and regulate travel in "combat zones."

The Utah Senator said he thought there is great need for "closer touch between Congress and the executive branch on these matters," and renewed his proposal that chairmen of House and Senate Foregin Affairs committees be given seats on the Munitions Control Board.

"If they had been members of the board, I don't believe the controversy would have developed last winter over sale of military planes to France," he said.

Bloom Points to Law

Bloom said he thought "the people of the country are beginning to understand the importance of returning to international law as the basis of dealing with foreign relations—returning to the policy we followed from the days of George Washington and got along pretty well."

Representative Johnson, who cooperated with Bloom in putting the neutrality bill through the House, said he thought the "lapse of time" operated against outbreak of war, as it provided Britain and France an opportunity to build defenses.

"But if war should break out," added Johnson, "there isn't enough propaganda in the country to stop repeal of the arms embargo."

Johnson said he believed Congress failed to meet the President's neutrality request last session, "because there was a feeling there would be no war, and everything would be all right. If they had thought war was threatening, I believe the result would have been different."

Few Political Cases Found By Civil Service Commission

Annual Average of 150 to 250 Shown, Out of 600,000 Employes, as Justice Dept. Prepares for Hatch Law Operations

Justice Department officials, soon to confer with the Civil Service Commission on enforcement of the Hatch act restricting Government employes' political activity, will learn the commission annually averages only 150 to 250 cases of alleged violation of provisions fundamentally the same as those of the Hatch law, commission sources disclosed yesterday.

They added, however, the relatively inconsequential number of violations—based on some 600,000 employes covered by the civil service prohibitions—is no indication that violations among the additional 300,000 employes now subject to a similar provision will be equally few.

Years of Custom Cited

Civil service employes, experts pointed out, have been subject to the prohibition against political activity since the commission was created, 56 years ago, and are, by and large, not the type who are politically active. The exempt categories, however, now are affected by the Hatch act, such as United States attorneys, United States marshals and deputy marshals, postmasters, and deputy internal revenue collectors, who have traditionally taken the most active part in political affairs.

In the fiscal year 1938 commission records show there were only 112 complaints worthy of investigating. Charges in 64 cases were not sustained. Five persons were removed, 22 were cautioned, 2 were suspended and the practice complained of discontinued in 19 cases. Fifteen of the cases investigated were for taking active part in political campaigns, 5 for transporting voters, 5 for soliciting support for a candidate, and 12 for holding office in a political organization. Miscellaneous charges, usually a combination of two or more of these were made in 69 cases.

About Same This Year

Figures for the fiscal year just completed, officials estimated, will be about the same. In 1933 there were 140 cases, in which charges against 37 were not sustained. In 1934, when the full report of the investigations of the 1932 elections were made, the figure jumped to 520 cases, only 320 of which were valid. In 1937, there were 171 cases, of which 76 were not sustained.

Civil service officials said they planned to ask Justice Department conferees about a relatively unpublicized provision in the Hatch act which would force the removal from Government service of any person who had "membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States."

Privately, officials hinted enforcement of the provisions would be extremely difficult, since, they argued, no one would admit to membership in such an organization, and second, an organization which advocated amending the Constitution out of existence, but which would follow methods prescribed in the Constitution to do it, one which "advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government."

Roosevelt Signs Security Changes

be far more adequate than under the present law. However, a reasonable relationship is retained between wage loss sustained and benefits received. This is a most important distinguishing characteristic of social insurance as contrasted with any system of flat pensions.

Payment of old age benefits will begin on January 1, 1940, instead of January 1, 1942. Increase in pay roll taxes scheduled to take place in January, 1940, is deferred. Benefit payments in the early years are substantially increased.

I am glad that the insurance benefits have been extended to cover workers in some occupations that have previously not been covered. However, workers in other occupations have been excluded. In my opinion, it is imperative that these insurance benefits be extended to workers in all occupations.

New Matching Ratio Praised

The Federal-State system of providing assistance to the needy aged, the needy blind and dependent children, has also been strengthened by increasing the Federal aid. I am particularly gratified that the Federal matching ratio to States for aid to dependent children has been increased from one-third to one-half of the aid granted. I am also happy that greater Federal contributions will be made for public health, maternal and child welfare, crippled children and vocational rehabilitation. These changes will make still more effective the Federal State co-operative relationship upon which the social security act is based, and which constitutes its great strength. It is important to note in this connection that the increased assistance the States will now be able to give will continue to be furnished on the basis of individual need, thus affording the greatest degree of protection within reasonable financial bounds.

As regards administration, probably the most important change that has been made is to require that State agencies administering any part of the social security act coming within the jurisdiction of the Social Security Board and the Children's Bureau shall set up a merit system for their employes. An essential element of any merit system is that employes shall be selected on a nonpolitical basis and shall function on a nonpolitical basis.

In 1934 I appointed a committee called the Committee on Economic Security, made up of Government officials, to study the whole problem of economic and social security and to develop a legislative program for the same. The present law is the result of its deliberation. That committee is still in existence and has considered and recommended the present amendments. In order to give reality and co-ordination to the study of any further developments that appear necessary I am asking the committee to continue its life and to make active study of various proposals which may be made for amendments or developments to the social security act.

The present members of the committee are:

Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, chairman.

Frank Murphy, Attorney General.

Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture.

Harry L. Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce.

I am adding to the committee at this time Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board.

Sex Slayer's Case to Be Sped to Jury

Florida Prosecutor to Ask Death-Sentence Murder Indictment

By International News Service.

Boca Raton, Fla., Aug. 11.—Indictments charging Thomas M. Cochran, alias Charles R. Jefferson, who confessed to assaulting and killing a movie-struck girl in a Florida swamp, with murder, criminal assault and kidnaping, will be sought when the grand jury meets Tuesday, State's Attorney Phil D. O'Connell said tonight.

Cochran, Army deserter and former convict, who posed as a movie "talent scout" to lure two young girls to a lonely stretch along Florida's coastline, confessed, authorities said, to murdering one girl when "she wouldn't do what I wanted her to."

The suspect probably will not be tried before September, O'Connell said. Murder, under Florida statutes, is punishable by death. Beth Collar, of California, who accompanied Cochran to Florida, is being held in Miami as a material witness.

Deserted from Army

Cochran, known by a variety of other names, including Thomas C. Goddard, admitted, authorities said, the murder of Ruth Frances Dunn, 17-year-old high school girl, near where he held her chum, Jean Bolton, 19, blonde night club singer, a prisoner.

He was being held tonight in the county jail at Orlando where he was taken last night from West Palm Beach after a crowd of several hundred gathered outside the jail.

Department of Justice officials at Washington revealed Cochran, under the alias of Thomas Goddard, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for Army desertion in 1926, and in 1927 he was sentenced to a 15-year term on a statutory charge.

Escaped Military Prison

Officials said after he was sentenced to military confinement at Presidio, Calif., for desertion, he escaped. Less than a year later he was arrested on statutory charges at Philadelphia, from where he was sentenced to 15 years in the State Industrial Reformatory at Huntingdon, Pa. He also has been arrested under other names for vagrancy, impersonation, larceny and investigation.

Officials declared his correct name was Thomas McBride Cochran, although he was widely known under other aliases. He was known in San Francisco as Thomas Ashwell, radio station executive and the husband of a San Rafael society girl, who recently divorced him after a two-year separation.

His stepfather, George C. Ashwell, San Francisco organizer of Mankind United, a Nation-wide group which claims it can make "every man a millionaire," at first denied but later admitted his relationship to the confessed killer.

Victim Stabbed, Shot

The body of Miss Dunn was found yesterday in a lonely spot near Boca Raton. She had been stabbed several times in the throat and body and shot through the head.

Miss Bolton, who was Miss Dunn's companion, staggered into the Boca Raton Fire Department yesterday to spread the alarm. She had not been harmed, but her story resulted in Jefferson's arrest.

Miss Bolton said Miss Dunn, Jefferson and herself were en route to West Palm Beach, where the two girls were to get a screen test preliminary to their promised entrance into the movies.

Estranged Wife Found

New York, Aug. 11 (AP).—The Daily News, in a copyrighted story, quotes a demure 22-year-old New York radio actress as saying she is the estranged wife of Thomas Cochran, alias Charles Jefferson, bogus Miami "talent scout" charged with the attack-slaying of 17-year-old Ruth Dunn.

The actress, Jay Meredith, said she married Jefferson in Los Angeles in March, 1937, after a short courtship that began in Miami while he was director of the Federal theater there, and left him last April, the News says.

She said she nursed Jefferson through violent headaches and fainting spells and that she continued to love him until she learned of the Florida crime.

'A Girls' World Is Screened At the Capitol

Elsa Maxwell Debuts As Author-Star of "Hotel for Women"

"HOTEL FOR WOMEN." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Elsa Maxwell and Kathryn Scola, adapted to the screen by Miss Scola and Darrell Ware, with Ann Sothern, Miss Maxwell, Linda Darnell, James Ellison, Jean Rogers, Lynn Bari, June Gale, Joyce Compton, John Halliday, Katharine Aldridge, Alan Dinehart, Sidney Blackmer, Amanda Duff, Ruth Terry, Chick Chandler, Ivan Lebedeff, Helen Ericson, Kay Linaker, Hal K. Dawson, Helen Brown, and Herbert Ashley. Directed by Gregory Ratoff. Reviewed Friday afternoon, At the Capitol Theater.

Elsa Maxwell, the guiding genius of society's more freakish parties, steps out both as actress and writer in this helter-skelter cinema of how young girls get along "on their own" in Manhattan. Models, actresses and would-be models and actresses—they all have a peck of trouble, but bushels of good times, when they try to throw the Big Town for a loss, according to Miss Maxwell.

"Hotel for Women" should delight the heart of the good Gov. Dickinson of Michigan, the executive who sees perils for young girls at every turn. For the young leddies are all mightily preoccupied with men. And all the men (one exception) are decidedly "on the make" and without a shred of serious intention. In fact, the venerable John Halliday is shown practically on the point of seducing lovely Linda Darnell and is only persuaded from his fell intention by a well-placed bullet aimed by a discarded sweetheart, played by Lynn Bari.

Is Briskly Directed

Gregory Ratoff's apt direction has much to do with the picture's high amusement content. Heights of entertaining improbability are scaled in the story. Beautiful Linda Darnell comes to New York to join her former best beau, finds him busy squiring the country's No. 1 Public Debutante. So Linda gets herself a job as model, within a month becomes the country's No. 1 model, sails glamorously around such places as the Pelican Club and El Sirocco. Just to complicate things, the father of the No. 1 Debutante develops a sinister crush on Linda. Also the best beau, completely overcome by the sight of Linda's face staring at him from every billboard in New York, falls in love with her all over again. The situation is the perfect evocation of a dream probably indulged in by every girl who's been given the go-by.

Then comes the fairly efficient target practice of Miss Bari. Linda loses her job because of notoriety. Her boy friend already has lost his job. But they are united in a blaze of happiness. 'Tis wonderful!

Linda Darnell, new to the screen, is as beautiful as they come. If good looks can make a career, she's on her way up. She's a fairly good actress, too.

Acting honors must go to Ann Sheridan as a considerably naughty lass. The audience loved her repeated line about men. "Dogs! Dogs! They're all dogs!" There are a flock of other pretties, too, all of them playing neat bits in the conglomerate portrait of young women in Manhattan. John Ellison plays Linda's boy friend quite nicely. John Halliday and Alan Dinehart are the elderly gentlemen who tempt young girls with star sapphires and silver fox.

As for the ample and notable Miss Maxwell, she simply plays herself, puffing away on cigar-sized cigarettes and fat lines with equal nonchalance.

Music Rules Stage

The stage show gives the picture a great run for its money this week. It's especially rich in music. Woody Herman reaches for the sky with his clarinet until it seems he's going to pull down notes that never existed before. The combination of the Herman clarinet and the madly rolling Carlson drums is a masterpiece in indigo. The splendid gypsy music of Yasha Bunchuk is a complete contrast both in material and method to the highly modernistic Herman doings.

Vic Hyde, who likes to play four trumpets at once, also does swell impressions of big-name bands with a one-man band outfit. He drew down heavy applause. The stage show thus became a three-way tie between Messrs. Bunchuk, Herman and Hyde.

Joe and Jane McKenna regaled the folks with a bunch of funny, though highly seasoned, doings. Their improprieties skidded pretty dangerously at times, enough to make old ladies sniff, but everyone else seemed to think they were just fine. The Trojans are a trio of young men in red sweaters who do trick tumbles in a way that seemed impossible on an August afternoon.

MARY HARRIS.

Columbia

Sonja Henie skirls her silver skates through "Second Fiddle" to the constantly enchanting tunes of Irving Berlin and the persistent delight of her fans, who still find her face sweet and her acting adequate, in a repeat engagement at the Columbia.

In a plot having the ramifications of a "Gone With the Wind" find-the-girl-for-the-novel idea, with the added titillation of developments in common with the actual Henie buildup through phoney romances, it might be said "Second Fiddle" has ideas enough. That they are wordily presented is a fault only a carping critic would bewail. The people love Miss Henie.

They also love Rudy Vallee, who is the false heart interest, and they are mad about Tyrone Power, who is the true love. Miss Henie blinks amiably through Mr. Vallee's songs and only attains an understandable glamour when she begins her gracefully swooping dances on skates.

Edna May Oliver has some tidy scenes, especially one where she is knitting in a pleasant alcoholic stupor and throwing glasses out the window with Mr. Power. Mr. Power plays a low-souled publicity man, who falls for one of his own creations. And all this without disturbing one of Miss Henie's fabulously long lashes.

In a sports review there is a chummy little short about how children are the centaurs of tomorrow and showing them performing really astounding equestrian feats. Our Gang camps out, encountering a geyser, poison ivy and other camping evils. Alfalfa sings one song in case you are an Alfalfa fan.

'Each Dawn I Die,' at the Earle, Is Prison Drama Raised to Nth Power

Cagney and Raft Are Costarred, With Able Supporting Cast; Variety on Stage

"EACH DAWN I DIE." Warner Brothers picturization of the novel by Jerome Odlum, adapted to the screen by Norman Reilly Raine and Warren Duff, co-starring James Cagney and George Raft, with Jane Bryan, George Bancroft, Stanley Ridges, Alan Baxter, Victor Jory, John Wray, Edward Pawley, Willard Robertson, Emma Dunn, Paul Hurst, Louis Jean Heydt, Joe Downing, Thurston Hall, William Davidson, Clay Clement, Charles Trowbridge, and Harry Cording. Directed by William Keighley. Previewed Monday, August 7, At the Earle Theater.

You will find everything ever embodied in the best of the prison melodramas in "Each Dawn I Die," plus a psychological quality that most, if not all, of the others have lacked. Over and above the excitement, the unfairness, the grimness and the thrills of turbulent events behind the stone walls, this subject manages to project a pretty powerful story of adherence to the code, on the part of one convict, and moral regeneration, on the part of another, through the example of the first.

BELL

The two principal characters are Frank Ross, a young, crusading newspaper reporter intent on putting criminals behind the bars no matter who they may happen to be, and "Hood" Stacey, a big-time gangster, who believes he can outsmart the law at every turn and run things—particularly his own life—to suit himself. Frank is "framed" into a long prison term by a group of influential citizens upon whose trail he is hot. On the prison train he is handcuffed to Stacey, going up for life. Out of this strange association of two diametrically opposed characters springs the entire motivation of the play.

The greater part of the action takes place in the penitentiary, where the prisoners plot all manner of rebellious enterprises against those in control over them—more especially Pete Kassock, one of the most viscious guards every given a heavy cane and authority over men. There are the heavy penalties in solitary that the more unruly prisoners pay in the "hole" on a diet of bread and water. Frank and Hood both get a taste of this and come out looking like ghosts. All the time, however, they are plotting freedom by different routes. Frank is sure his paper will be able to "spring" him, on the strength of new evidence that he is innocent; Hood takes the hard way and manages an escape. He has pledged himself to free Ross through his underworld connections, where the powers of rectitude have failed.

Reaches Thunderous Climax

Hood seems to have laid down on the job until Joyce, Frank's office associate, hunts him out in his hide-away and makes him understand that her lover has not double-crossed him, but is doing his stretch in the "hole" rather than be a squealer. What happens after that culminates in one of the most thunderous climaxes anyone would care to see, with Hood sacrificing his life to match his pal's honesty and trueness to principle. There is, after all, it seems, such a thing as honor among thieves.

"Each Dawn I Die" could hardly have been better cast than it is. Cagney and Raft, as everybody must know by now, are at their best in this sort of thing. They perform their present chores on an equal footing with little to choose between them, except that Cagney's role is a slightly more expanded one than his co-star's. As the girl, Joyce, Jane Bryan manages to be tense and moving without ever stepping over the line into the maudlin. Emma Dunn has several effective, but brief, scenes as Mrs. Ross, whose son is so unjustly persecuted. There are no other feminine roles in the play.

There are, on the other hand, so many excellent male performances that one scarcely knows where to begin. Particularly vibrant portrayals are contributed to a practically perfect ensemble by George Bancroft, as the understanding warden; John Wray, as Kassock, the uniformed "rat"; Stanley Ridges, Alan Baxter, Paul Hurst, Edward Pawley, Louis Jean Heydt and Joe Downing, as jailbirds of various stripes, and Willard Robertson, as a tough deputy warden, a role a little out of his usual line. Thurston Hall, Victor Jory, the criminal "leading citizens," and Charles Trowbridge, as the judge, turn in handsome supporting performances to pile up the measure of interest in a film play of extraordinary vigor.

Diversified Stage Bill

The stage portion of the entertainment at the Earle this week is a well-rounded and smooth-running diversion without any act of outstanding brilliance. Alvin, Kendall and Drew follow the Roxyettes' "orangeade" opening, with an interval of "challenge" tap dancing that met with favor yesterday afternoon, and, in turn, are followed by Bob Dupont, who ranks right up at the top among the comic jugglers. Many of Bob's most difficult feats are executed so skillfully that they seem much easier than they are. Moore and Revel offer their grotesque comedy dances and Eddie White, perennial singing monologist, scores his usual hit with some new "gags" that are well chosen and genuinely funny. In the meantime, the Roxyettes have been cavorting in a series of nice routines, with Earline King microphoning some tuneful songs from various vantage points. The Roxyettes go acrobatic in the finale and some of them, I fear, could do with a few more limbering exercises.

A Looney-Tune cartoon comedy, "Wise Quacks"—pretty clever in spots—and the Paramount News supplement a feature that will have you hanging onto your chair most of the way.

FINANCE DEPT.: When Frank Capra, of Columbia Pictures, went to Europe the last time, he took Nate Spingold's Rolls Royce car with him, inasmuch as Spingold was leaving for Europe one month later. To facilitate Capra's securing licenses in Europe, Spingold transferred the car's ownership to Frank . . . Capra used the car in England, and when Spingold arrived there, Frank transferred the car's ownership back to Spingold . . . When the latter returned to America with his car, he discovered that he had to pay customs duties on that Rolls-Royce which the customs-men insisted, the records showed he had purchased from Capra in England.

MUSIC DEPT.: When Giovanni Martinelli was singing Othello, the stage directions called for him to walk to the rear of the stage during a short rest in his solo, turn his back to the audience for a few seconds, and then return to finish the number . . . He questioned this odd interlude, but was told that this was traditional—ever since the role was originated years ago by Tamango, a famous tenor who had retired to Italy . . . When Martinelli next visited Italy, he found Tamango, and asked him about this tradition for which he was responsible . . . "Oh, that," Tamango explained, after consulting the opera's score, "it's just that I hit a high B-flat, got a tickle in my throat, and walked to the back of the stage to spit."

BOOK DEPT.: Alexander Woollcott showed some friends a copy of his first story, "Precipice," written for his Hamilton College paper when he was 18 . . . "But you write exactly the same way now," someone pointed out. "There's no difference" . . . "There been a drastic change in my style," Woollcott protested. "Note that in this story, the heroine drinks Benedictine before dinner—instead of after."

FASHIONS NOTE: The lanky Harry Jans, of the veteran vaudeville team of Jans and Whalen, wears the highest collar worn by any Broadway figure . . . "Why does Jans wear such high collars?" Whalen was asked . . . "It's supposed to be a secret," he replied, "but he wears them because he has the Empire State Building tattooed on his neck."

ETIQUETTE DEPT.: The young wife of a political leader sat next to Dorothy Thompson at a dinner . . . She introduced herself and asked "And now will you tell me your name?" . . . "Certainly," Dorothy informed. "I have two names—Dorothy Thompson and Mrs. Lewis" . . . "Which Mrs. Lewis?" the young lady persisted . . . "Mrs. Sinclair Lewis," she was told . . . "My dear," she whispered, "if I had a lovely name like Mrs. Sinclair Lewis, I'd never use such a common one like Thompson."

MOVIES DEPT.: Herman Mankiewicz, the scenarist, has been enthusiastic about psychoanalysis for many years—particularly about the newest analyst yhom he consults . . . "There's no doubt he's a great analyst," Mankiewicz announced, "but there's also no doubt that I'm a greater patient."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

HOPPER

Their friendship started in 1907. In those days Will had a horse on the stage which he roped. When he missed, he told a story. Fred was there one day when he missed often. Will said: "I gotta do it this time. 'Cause I've run out of jokes." But he missed again, then said: "I'd like to tell you about the cross the Ku Klux Klan built." At that, several hissed. Then quick as a flash: "You don't think I'd be darned fool enough to tell it now, do you?"

When he became famous, a woman fumbled for words, said: "Don't want to bother I'd love your autograph." While he was signing, he grinned: "When you stop bothering me then's when I'll be bothered." Our stars might use that slogan profitably! Another time when he and Fred Astaire were driving from Long Island, with Will gripping the seat, a little flower girl held up a bouquet and said: "Flowers Mister?" Said Will grimly: "We don't need 'em yet."

Later, Fred told one to Jesse Jones about Al Smith when he was a boy. Seems a politician offered an apple for the best answer he got as to why boys were Republicans or Democrats. The first boy was Republican because his father was. Al piped up: "I'm a Democrat because I want that apple." I'd give an apple to Jesse Jones if he'd run for President on the Republican ticket. How about drafting him?

Letitia Fairbanks, Doug's niece, just signed long term contract at Warners. She's a beauty. When his other nieces wanted a screen career Doug, sr., asked them to change their name.

You know how visitors laugh at Los Angeles signs, some of which are seventy miles out. They read: CITY LIMITS OF LOS ANGELES. Admiral Block told me one of his bluejackets got one and planted it in the heart of Shanghai!

Looks as though the three Lanes might be starred in the Bronte sisters. Why not give that story to Katharine Hepburn and her two sisters? They have the little women look, and not modern.

There's an Indian maiden in "The Deerslayer" named "Hist." But Gene Towne says there'll be no Hist in his picture. Too tempting for columnists! Yea, verily!

Poor 'Blondie' Gets No Rest On Met. Screen

Dagwood Bumpsteads Go Home to Relax After Their Vacation

"BLONDIE TAKES A VACATION." Columbia picturization of a screenplay by Richard Flournoy from a story by Mr. Flournoy, Karen DeWolf and Robert Chapin based on the comic strip characters created by Chic Young, with Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, Daisy, Donald Meek, Danny Mummert, Donald MacBride, Thomas W. Ross, Elizabeth Dunne, Robert Wilcox, Harlan Briggs, and Irving Bacon. Directed by Frank R. Strayer. Reviewed Friday afternoon, At the Metropolitan Theater.

Doggy doings disarm these dog days at the Metropolitan. "Blondie Takes a Vacation" is the unassuming and diverting screen feature and, of course, Blondie, Dagwood and Baby Dumpling are accompanied by Daisy, the crafty canine. And, barking up another comedy, are the Three Stooges in "Calling All Curs."

Blondie fanciers will find this vacation episode more leisurely paced and leaning to more plot complications than the two previous films of the comic-strip family. There are, albeit, some nifty "gags" after the style of those which have won the preceding adventures considerable popularity.

For instance, most Daisy-doters well know that pup's helpful habit of rushing through the little panel in the front door, when the postman or the newsboy whistles. No matter where Daisy may be, at the sound of the whistle she comes rushing at—and through—the door. But in a strange house, Daisy expects that unique sliding panel to be in its accustomed place!

Blondie to the Rescue

And the spot where the Bumsteads are vacationing is a strange place at first glance. They are the only ones in the hotel. As it is, they have been kicked out of the better one across the lake because the owner is a picklepuss who hates babies and dogs. Hence the pleasant, but forsaken, hostelry must shelter them. There they learn that the picklepuss is trying to ruin the trade of his rivals' inn, and is about to take over, for he owns the mortgage.

While Blondie has come to the lake for a vacation, that fiery little lady hates evil with the vehemence of a John L. Lewis. She gets no rest and neither do Dagwood, Baby Dumpling or Daisy, but they wind up by getting the goods on the crook and saving the hotel for the elderly couple which owns it. They even refuse half-interest in the place, because they prefer to go home to rest up from their vacation.

Skunks in an air-cooling system and Donald Meek as a fiery pyromaniac are representative of the gags that keep this refreshing piece from stalling. Daisy and Baby chase the cute little white-tailed kittens up the air-cooling pipes and the perfectly named Mr. Meek proves a hero.

Larry Simms Featured

Penny Singleton and Arthur Lake turn in their now-familiar performances of Blondie and Dagwood. In comparison with "Bachelor Mother's" minute Elpert Coplin, jr., and "Unexpected Father's" Baby "Sandy," Larry Simms is a cynical oldster, but his verbose observations on adult behavior are as unexpected and merry as they are in the comic strip. Larry and Daisy make a great pair.

Additional screen fare at the Metropolitan includes the above-mentioned "Calling All Curs," in which those wags, the Three Stooges, run a dog hospital. They have the prettiest nurses! "One Day Stand" is an interesting short on the circus and its travel troubles. Russ Morgan's orchestra plays in "Sweet Memory" and there is an extensive Paramount Newsreel.

"Blondie Takes a Vacation" is an amusing film because of its very unpretentiousness.

RKO-Keith's

One of the brightest comedies of the year, "Bachelor Mother" has entered its third week at RKO-Keith's. This Ginger Rogers vehicle will remain on the Fifteenth street screen until Tuesday evening.

Smart miming and direction account for the sprightliness of this story of a young girl who becomes a stray baby's mother quite by chance. Miss Rogers' comedy is brittle and sure and she is exceptionally well supported by David Niven, as a puzzled young boss who wants to help her, but who, even at the very end of the film, doesn't quite believe Ginger's story about her baby. Charles Coburn is his millionaire father who plays with the the table silver; Ernest Truex is a mincing head of the foundling home and Frank Albertson plays a realistic jitterbug.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 11 (NEA).—Such a drive as you never heard has been put on by Harry Goetz and Max Gordon to get Anna Neagle for "The American Way."

LOUELLA PARSONS

It all happened Wednesday night, when Herbert Wilcox ran "Nurse Edith Cavell" and they saw the English actress. So delighted were they with La Neagle that they promptly put in a bed for her to play the role Florence Eldridge plays opposite Freddie March on the New York stage. Freddie is all but set for the screen version, but Miss Eldridge will not appear with him, which seems to bear out the rumor that the Marches will welcome a visit from the stork.

Unfortunately, Wilcox has already contracted for "Bonnie Prince Charlie" to be made in Scotland and Miss Neagle is supposed to appear in a command performance before the King and Queen October 18. However, there have been several conferences to try to arrange matters so that Miss Neagle can play both the immigrant wife in "The American Way" and Flora MacDonald in "Bonnie Prince Charlie."

Virginia Peine goes into the hospital today for a minor operation. She expects to be out early next week and to start rehearsals for "Thank Your Lucky Stars." If she is unhappy about George Raft, nobody wold know it, for she looks stunning and she is going to work in earnest. The play opens at the Belasco here August 16. It is Virginia's first legitimate stage experience and a wonderful chance to show the movie makers what she can do. The angel back of her play is being kept quiet, but we happen to know that Andrew Lambe, the author, has money in the show and that it will be produced much as are the stock companies in the East. Eddie Gribbon and Rita Owen are others already in the cast.

Among the important sales of the past week was H. G. Wells' "Food for the Gods," which was bought by Paramount with the idea of following "Dr. Cyclops," now in the throes of production. "Food for the Gods" is by no means a sequel to "Dr. Cyclops," but it is on the same order and will also be directed by Ernest Schoedsack, with Dale Van Every producing. The price is said to be in the neighborhood of $25,000, which should make the pessimistic Mr. Wells feel very happy, for books do not often bring that much return to their authors.

John Halliday, who commutes as casually from Honolulu for his picture jobs as most movie players travel from Beverly Hills or the Valley, has raved so much about life on the island that David Selznick is all but shooting a picture over there. Halliday, back in town for retakes on "Intermezzo," has been arguing with Selznick that no picture has ever truly caught the spirit of Honolulu and that most of the tropical island movies are just a lot of hooey. According to John, the average islander wouldn't even recognize D. Lamour walking down the street in a sarong. He should know what he's talking about, since the Hallidays have a beautiful home over there and are part of the swank social life. It all sounded so good to David that he sent a writer back with Halliday on the Thursday Clipper to get the details.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Johnny Weismuller and Beryl Scott will take their big step the last of this month. The little battle they had is all over and they are as happy as happy can be; the Atlantic City crusaders get in tomorrow and all of them—Binnie Barnes, Eddie Arnold, Ralph Morgan, Wayne Morris, etc., will be at the Hollywood Legion Stadium Sunday for a big mass meeting; Richard Dix is in Reno. Don't get excited. Mrs. D. is with him and he's there absorbing local color for his next movie; the Darryl Zanucks have cute invitations out for their annual barn dance August 26; Lucille Ball back with her steady boy friend, Al Hall, at the Brown Derby, after stepping out two nights in a row with Orson Welles; Bing Crosby's pa and ma looked at a rough print of "The Starmaker." Reminds me, there is a big birthday shindig August 18 for Gus Edwards, whose life inspired this next Bing Crosby movie; Hugh Herbert received biggest hand and the loudest woo woo from the sidewalk fans at the Dunne-Boyer premiere; Muriel Hutchinson, who is so pretty, at the premiere with Tom Rutherford. Wait until you see here in "After the Thin Man."

Ann Sheridan getting some real competition from pretty Mrs. Charlie Feldman at a party with Charlie, Anatole Litvak and Ernst Lubitsch after the Dunne opening; Joy Hodges beaued by Billy Seymour to the Troc; ditto Virginia Peine with the Buster Colliers and William Haines; Linda Darnell and Maury Grossman at the Tropical Ice Gardens. Wait until the fans see Linda in "Hotel for Women;" Cecil DeMille celebrated his birthday today at Catalina and Mrs. DeMille flew over to be with him; Jane Bryan's dressing room filled with flowers because of her big break with Paul Muni in "We Are Not Alone;" Ralph Wheelwright parted with his tonsils today; Phil Ohman, prolific tune writer, has sold three new catchy cowboy numbers to Paramount.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

1,300 Planes Test British Air Defense

Fighter Beats Bomber, Ministry Finds After Mimic Raid, Blackout

By Frank R. Kelley.

Special Cable to The Post

London, Aug. 11.—Three days of intensive "aerial warfare," in which 1,300 bombing and fighting planes of the British Royal Air Force were engaged in testing air raid defenses, closed at 7 p. m. today, after reaching their climax early this morning in a four-hour blackout of southern England, including London.

While officials disagreed about the efficiency of the blackout, the air ministry announced the mimic air battle had shown "the fighter is more than a match for the raiding bomber if it succeeds in engaging it."

The 500 bombers from enemy "Eastland" made 500 raids in 72 hours on Westland territory. A high proportion of these "were intercepted by defending fighters, supported by antiaircraft batteries and searchlights," officials said.

Results Theoretical

The results were purely theoretical, since the bombers dropped no bombs, and the fighters discharged no machine guns. The antiaircrafters contented themselves with training empty weapons on the foe. The public can imagine what might have been the damage if the friendly bombers had been German.

After the blackout of London, the air ministry said they were satisfied that the city "had been saved from destruction." Invading bombers reported the 400 square miles of metropolitan area inhabited by 8,000,000 persons "looked like a few small scattered villages," the air ministry said.

On the other hand, individual pilots and neutral observers said they had no difficulty in tracing the outline of the city or in placing its landmarks. It was agreed the parking lights automobiles and buses were allowed to keep on were effective in tracing the main streets.

Train Yards Easy Targets

Trains were far from obscured as they crawled in and out of main line stations. The stations themselves, with their myriad switch lights in the yards, were easy targets. Bridge and barge lights on the Thames made that river a guiding line into the heart of the city.

Sir John Anderson, director of air raid precautions, announced smaller but more intensive blackouts would be held soon, probably early next month, and before midnight, to provide a more thorough test. It is possible that next time the government will assume legal powers to compel householders, public utilities and transport systems to douse or mask their lights.

Ciano's visit to Hitler because it would be largely in the nature of a "courtesy" call.

Berchtesgaden is only a 30-minute motor drive from Salzburg, which is visible on clear days from Hitler's mountain-top home.

Italian and German attaches, without revealing the details of the talks here, expressed "optimism" and added that they had served to bring Italy and Germany more closely together.

Ciano is expected to depart for Italy Monday.

Der Angriff Gives Warning

The assertion that the Salzburg meeting was intended as "a warning to those who play with thoughts of war" came from the organ of German Propaganda Minister Goebbels, the newspaper Der Angriff.

The Salzburg discussions, Der Angriff said, revolved around the fact "the democracies clearly are continuing their encirclement policy."

"Germany and Italy," it was added, "are compelled to continue to discuss all eventualities and bring their decisions into line with the existing situation. In that lies the reason for the new meeting of the ministers which is, at the same time, an expression of the determination of the two axis powers and a warning to those who play with thoughts of war."

Germans Reported Seized

Berlin, Aug. 11 (U.P.).—An official news agency report tonight alleged that four noncommissioned officers of the German air force and four German civilians were arrested today in the Polish Corridor after 30 men in Polish army uniforms surrounded their railroad car.

The officers and one woman were released later, but the other three were held.

The D. N. B. agency commented bitterly on the incident saying:

"No people on earth can be expected to go on letting wild hordes, whether they wear uniform or not, arbitrarily decide whether train traffic with the frontier province is to be maintained or whether whole bands of passengers shall be seized and arrested."

Danzig Problem Acute

Berlin, Aug. 11 (A.P.).—High government quarters expressed the opinion tonight the Danzig problem had reached "an acute stage."

At the same time, diplomatic circles were equally convinced the relationship of Hungary to the Rome-Berlin axis required further clarification.

The speech last night by Albert Forster, Nazi district leader in Danzig, was interpreted officially as Danzig's unequivocal demand that "the unholy economic and diplomatic junction of the Free City to Poland" be ended at once.

German government quarters were noncommittal, however, as to whether even the unconditional return of Danzig to Germany would satisfy the latters' claims on Poland.

The attitude of men in the Wilhelmstrasse who know what is going on behind the scenes was clearly one of having other scores to settle besides Danzig.

out against two of the men on a charge of murder and against the other two on a charge of membership in an "illegal terrorist organization." The prisoners will be handed over forthwith to the jurisdiction of the local Chinese district court, a legal puppet of the Japanese regime.

The Chinese government at Chungking has been notified of the decision which Chinese circles here condemned.

The case of the four Chinese has a faint chance of becoming a Far Eastern version of the Tom Mooney controversy in the United States and the Dreyfuss affair in France. Two British defenders of civil liberties, Norman Bentwich, professor of international relations at Jerusalem University, and Miss Margery Fry, a governor of the British Broadcasting Corporation, instructed Elwell & Binford Hole, a London firm of solicitors, to apply through their Chinese agents for a writ of habeas corpus in British courts in China on behalf of the four men.

"Entirely on Its Merits"

The British foreign office insisted that the affair had been dealt with "entirely on its merits from a juridical point of view," and without relation to the other issues in the Tientsin dispute, including Japan's demand for surrender of Chinese silver held by the British, and for Britain's sanction for the introduction of Japanese currency. Whitehall took pains to emphasize that the surrender of the four men formed no part of any "political bargain" with Japan, although no one concealed the hope that Japan would now "act more reasonably" about the larger points of contention.

In this connection, the British government today forwarded "new instructions" to Craigie, after considering Japan's demand for wider police powers at Tientsin. The silver and currency discussions, however, have been suspended until Britain completes its "consultations" with the United States and France.

Naturally enough, Britain is preoccupied with developments in Europe, closer to home, than with the Far East, and nothing more has been heard of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's warning of a week ago that Britian might find it necessary, "in certain circumstances," to dispatch a large fleet to the Pacific.

These purchasers are those who buy gasoline for motorboats and other similar uses and who want to ask for a return of the road tax part of the price.

Seal Comments on eVto

Elwood Seal, District Corporation Counsel, said last night that President Roosevelt's veto of the parking meter will not affect the present situation.

"The bill," he explained, "simply authorized the Commissioners to purchase meters in addition to those installed during the experimental period. None of the existing meters will be disturbed."

Vernon E. West, assistant corporation counsel, said a provision to purchase the meters was "inadvertently" left out of the bill.

U. S. Issues Book On Syphilis Tests

The United States Public Health Service yesterday published a manual of revised techniques of blood tests for syphilis. The authors are Dr. Harry Eagle, of Johns Hopkins Medical School; Dr. W. A. Hinton, of the Massachusetts Health Department; Dr. Reuben L. Kahn, of the University of Michigan Hospital; Dr. B. S. Kline, of Cleveland, and Dr. John A. Kolmer, of Temple University

Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr, assistant surgeon general in charge of the venereal disease drive, commented: "If these techniques were thoroughly understood and carefully followed by every serological laboratory technician, it would mean that no one could raise, in justice, the cry that syphilis control is hampered by unreliable laboratory performance" length of 55 feet and a cruising speed of 200 miles per hour, the type closely resembles the Douglas DC-3 transports in wide use on American and foreign commercial airlines. Officers rate the type one of the safest and most maneuverable in the Air Corps fleet.

Air Corps headquarters in Washington said the toll taken by today's disaster would mar a safety record which in the last six months brought a sharp reduction in premiums on life insurance issued flight personnel.

Inquiry to Be Held

Headquarters, however, denied the crash could be described as "one of the worst in Air Corps history" in terms of lives lost. Bombers normally carry crews of seven or nine men, officers said, and a crash generally claims the lives of all aboard.

Officers said a board of inquiry probably will be named tomorrow by Maj. Gen. Delos E. Emmons, commander, general headquarters Air Force, to determine the cause of the crash.

Langley Field, headquarters of the GHQ Air Force Second Wing—to which the wrecked plane was assigned—is also headquarters for Gen. Emmons and staff.

Climbed 150 Feet

Lieut. David H. Baker, of Bolling Field, who was taking off immediately after Lieut. MacKay, said the bomber climbed up to a little more than 150 feet when the left wing dropped.

"The plane made a 90-degree turn and then plunged almost straight down," he added.

Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Air Corps, in Washington, stated, when informed of the crash, "accidents of this sort are greatly regretted and we'll take every opportunity to determine the cause with a view to decreasing the possibility of their recurrence in the future."

Raiders Sack 3 Synagogues In Slovakia

2,000 Refugees on Greek Ships to Defy Palestine Blockade

By International News Service

Bratislava, Slovakia, Aug. 11.—In a violent anti-Semitic outbreak timed to coincide with the beginning of the Jewish Sabbath, a pro-Nazi Slovak crowd tonight raided and sacked three synagogues and attacked scores of Jewish worshipers, seriously wounding many of them.

Sacred scrolls of the Torah, prayer books and other religious objects were taken out of the synagogues by the roving mob and burned in the streets, while Jewish men and women, fleeing in panic, were intercepted, stoned and beaten.

Dozens of the victims were left on the pavements of this Slovak capital bleeding from their wounds.

Shortly before midnight, the police finally managed to break up the anti-Semitic raiding crews and disperse them to their homes. It was the worst anti-Jewish outbreak Europe has witnessed in months.

Moscow Three-Power Parley To Map Joint Military Plans

London, Aug. 11.—The Anglo-French-Soviet general staff talks, opening in Moscow tomorrow, will embrace a wide range of co-ordinated army, navy and air force plans covering the whole European sphere and possibly stretching out to the Far East, it was learned tonight.

As a matter of fact, this correspondent is able to state on unimpeachable authority that the agenda of the far-reaching triangular conference was agreed upon well in advance of its inauguration.

The British and French military, naval and air missions arrived at Moscow today and were warmly greeted. Immediately afterward, it was announced that the talks will start tomorrow, thus reflecting the determination of the powers concerned to lose no time in getting down to business.

Eager to Know Soviet Power

The agreement on the agenda, reached among London, Paris and Moscow, provides for a discussion embracing a wide scope of armed co-operation from the Atlantic to the Black Sea and from the North Sea and Baltic to the Mediterranean and Near East.

The British and the French are anxious to know the real strength of the Russian forces; the extent to which the Soviet industries are organized for necessary supplies not only to Russian forces but to assist Poland and Rumania; the rail and road systems over which aid can be moved to these two countries, and what naval and air forces can co-operate with the British and French in the northern waters, the Baltic and the Mediterranean.

The Russians want to know what naval, military and air forces Great Britain and France are prepared to dispatch to the eastern areas. The Russians want a free exchange of all plans of the high command of the three powers. There will be some hesitancy on the part of the British to reveal those strategic considerations which they believe concern British Empire defense outside of immediate European questions.

May Discuss Far East

The Russians recently suggested that staff talks include discussion on the Far East, but the British and French consider that such matters should not be taken up presently since the proposed triple alliance is concerned primarily with European problems. Should Japan, however, join the axis military alliance, British authorities feel that Far East military and naval strategy will have to be discussed between the three powers.

It is foreseen that the staff talks will take three or four weeks, even longer, but that with agreement between the general staffs, the political pact will be quickly framed, including a definition on the disputed question as to what would constitute indirect aggression on the Baltic states.

WHO ELSE WANTS TO TRY THE U.S. BEER THAT EQUALS EUROPE'S BEST BEERS!

GUNTHER'S BEATS THAT "IMPORTED" TASTE...AT THE PRICE OF REGULAR BEER

Gunther's is Maryland's own . . . the beer that International experts call equal in every way to the world-famous beers from abroad

DRY AND BEER-Y. Not a trace of sweetness. Light in body . . . right in the complete beer effect. No extra solids to make it heavy. And because it isn't sweet and heavy, it doesn't "fill you up"!

This is Gunther's "Special Dry Lager." The beer that International experts agree is equal in every way to Europe's finest brews.

Moreover, you don't have to pay 20¢ or 30¢, the usual asking price for some of those great-name beers from abroad.

Who else wants to join those thousands who live in Maryland and D. C. who have made Gunther's the largest-selling beer in this area?

Why Gunther's Costs So Little

Is big volume alone the secret of a low cost for such a fine beer? By no means. Even though Gunther's buys the best ingredients in the biggest quantities of any brewery in the South and thus saves money . . .

There are no long haul freight charges added to the cost of your glass of Gunther's. No import taxes. In addition, all of Gunther's beer is made right here and most all of it is sold here. This one fact means a saving of from 30¢ to 50¢ a case that out-of-state brewers have to pay "middlemen" for handling their beer for them

Think these savings over...and you'll know why Gunther's can offer you a glass of beer that is equal to the world's most famous beers...yet charge you no more than regular beer prices.

Another Air Tragedy

Whatever the proximate cause of the disaster at Langley Field, which took the lives of nine Army fliers yesterday, tragedies of this sort are the inevitable accompaniment of a preparedness campaign in which aerial defense is an important factor.

The speed-up in plane production and the tremendous increase in the number of flying hours mean a corresponding rise in accidents and fatalities. That our experience is not unique is indicated by the large number of fatal accidents that have occurred in Great Britain of late as the expansion of the air defense forces has proceeded.

While realizing the inevitability of accidents, the public is not, however, disposed to accept easy explanations of such occurrences. It asks, and rightly expects to be informed, whether the increase in the number of fatalities in the air is out of proportion to the increase in the number of flying hours. In other words, is there evidence of increasing carelessness or lack of training on the part of fliers? Has there been any disposition to sacrifice safety to speed in training an enlarged air force?

If so, lives have not only been needlessly sacrificed but they have been lost as the result of a policy that is self-defeating. For a dependable air force and dependable airplanes are essential to real preparedness. The kind of haste that puts into the air men with inadequate training and planes not rigorously inspected would defeat our purpose. If there is even a suspicion that the mounting toll of fatalities is due to such conditions, now is the time to call a halt and put increased emphasis on safety devices.

Particeps Criminis?

An angry crowd gathered Thursday outside the jail at West Palm Beach, Fla., evidently with some notion of lynching a white prisoner whom the authorities with admirable foresight had moved to another place.

The prisoner, one Thomas Cochran, alias Ashwell, alias Goddard, a former director of a WPA theatrical project, had confessed to the rape and murder of a 17-year-old schoolgirl. Except for what seems an accidental circumstance, the same death might have befallen another girl of the same age.

The murdered girl, had, it seems, made a mild success in high school dramatics. The other is described in news dispatches as "a tiny blonde singer." The murderer, representing himself as a "Hollywood talent scout," seems to have had little difficulty in persuading them to accompany him from their home in Miami, Fla., to Palm Beach for a screen test. The man and girls were missing for four days. Two hours before he was arrested the naked body of the slain girl was found in a swamp. The story, with its elements of horror and sex, was something of a windfall to tabloid news editors on an otherwise rather dull afternoon.

It is, of course, for philosophers or psycho-pathologists to say in what foul backwaters of the human soul the explanation of such a crime must be sought. This crime, alas, is by no means unique. It is well enough known that there exist in every civilized society persons whose sexual distortions are such as to place in mortal peril the adolescents and sometimes children that chance may put in their way.

But was it, however, entirely chance that made the promise of screen tests and the possibility of Hollywood careers so plausible to these ingenuous girls? Is it not possible that for years their imaginations were being conditioned for this very snare, not by the glibness of any perverted "charm man" or "adventurous egoist," but by the romantic rubbish that from infancy may have constituted the bulk of their education? This rubbish, incessantly fabricated by irresponsible men for reasons of profit, and all too often abetted by newspapers and even elected officials, is poured month by month in a steady stream across the consciousness of youth.

The sophisticated, it is true, recognize the shoddy content of this stuff and the sordid motives behind it; they laugh, scornfully and ignore it. But there are millions of impressionable folk who do not ignore it, millions for whom it has become part of the national ethos. If these unlucky young girls had got it into their heads that the road of gladness leads inevitably to Hollywood, whose fault was that? Some of our sociologists who are now measuring the dangers of Communist and Fascist propaganda might take time out to measure the dangers in the cult of glamour.

Untranquil Axis

"The German people," said Adolf Hitler in a speech on April 28, "can go about their business with perfect tranquillity. Their frontiers are guarded by the best army in the history of Germany. The sky is protected by the most powerful air fleet and our coasts are rendered unassailable by any enemy power. In the west, the strongest defense work of all time has been built."

It is apparent, however, that anything but "perfect tranquillity" reigns in Germany. The strident accusations of Polish "warmongering," the irrational denunciation of "encirclement," and continuous efforts to allay German fears all suggest that nerves in the Reich are also feeling the impact of the "white war" now raging in Europe.

Thus, on Thursday, Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, commander in chief of the German army, in a speech broadcast throughout Germany, emphatically assured his hearers that Hitler is unlikely to lead them into war. The widespread showing of a film depicting the strength of the Limes (Germany's Maginot) line had similar reassuring purpose. And curious confirmation of the fact that the Nazi government finds it advisable to play down the thought of war is seen in the speech made this week by Albert Foerster, Nazi gauleiter for Danzig.

In this speech Foerster made the not unreasonable declarations that Danzig would, in due course, return to Germany and that if attacked this incontestably German city would have the full support of Hitler and the Reich. But there was nothing in his remarks to suggest that Germany is ready for a showdown on the issue.

Poland's strong stand, and the support the Warsaw government has received from Great Britain and France, is probably one reason why Hitler is staying his hand. But there is also the additional reason that there are loose ends of policy that must be tied up elsewhere in Europe before Germany could face the prospect of a general conflagration with any degree of assurance.

In this connection, the meeting being held at Salzburg between the German and Italian foreign ministers has a particular pertinence. Three, possibly four, subjects are believed to be on their agenda—Danzig, Hungary, Japan and also, perhaps, Yugoslavia. Every one of these subjects concerns the axis partners individually and as a bloc, but whether their individual interests coincide at all points is by no means certain.

Hungary, for instance, is very friendly to the axis. But her friendship for Italy is much greater than it is for Germany while the pressure upon her is much more intense from the direction of the Third Reich than from the side of Italy. It is possible that balked at Danzig, Hitler may revert to the older strategy of pressure on Rumania via Hungary. But should that lead to the establishment of a Nazi protectorate over Hungary, the present unbalance of power in Germany's favor would be greater than ever.

Nor is Italy particularly inclined to incur any risks in order to make Danzig German. The Italian people want peace and they are anything but enthusiastic about the alliance with the Third Reich. Indeed anxiety has been so plainly manifest that the Fascist press has seen fit to play down the Danzig crisis almost to the point of ignoring it.

The Italians had a bad scare last September and the regime has apparently decided that it would be unwise to give them another. It is possible, therefore, that at Salzburg Count Ciano, at Mussolini's direction, will counsel Germany to go slowly on the Danzig issue, that is if Italy still possesses any real freedom of movement within the orbit of the axis. In Europe's "war of nerves" neither the Germans nor the Italians are being spared their share of jitters.

Strict Interpretation?

"The important thing for the Department of Justice in connection with the Hatch act interpretations," says Attorney General Murphy, "is good faith. To err, if we must, on the side of the law, but not to try to interpret it away from the intent of Congress."

Apparently the Attorney General neglected to follow his own admirable precepts in ruling that the Hatch act does not prevent Government employes outside the civil service from public expression of their political views and preferences, either orally, by radio, or in writing, provided only that they are not participating in an organized political campaign.

Technically this interpretation may be justified, since the word, "privately," was omitted from the provision of the Hatch act affirming the right of Government workers to "vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects." But the Congress clearly intended that this law should extend to noncivil service employes the restrictions applicable to the civil service. And those in this category are expressly limited to "private" expressions of political opinion.

The Attorney General's interpretation throws the doors wide open to a large amount of political activity of the sort that advocates of the Hatch act believed to be barred. His ruling decidedly does not err "on the side of the law," but is rather calculated to undermine it. The "strict construction" of the statute which Mr. Murphy promises is not consonant with public appeals for support of preferred candidates.

Even if such activities are not part of an organized political movement, they are evidence that Government officials are taking an "active part in political campaigns." And that is one of the things expressly forbidden under the Hatch act.

Widening The Breach

The developing split in the majority party will not be lessened by the President's message to the Young Democrats, now in convention at Pittsburgh. The essence of that statement is a threat to break with his party if it decides to nominate "conservative candidates." And a threat of such far-reaching character is bound to arouse hostility among many who are as entitled to call themselves loyal Democrats, and honest liberals, as is the President.

The nominating convention is an affair of very vital importance in the American system of government. Its purpose is not merely to name a candidate who may be expected to carry the party standard to victory. Equally important is the definition of a platform on which the candidate will take his stand. Inevitably the platform is, within the broad lines of general party policy, a matter of compromise. It aims to appeal to the greatest possible number of voters, and for that reason seldom seems wholly ideal to any single party member, including the Presidential nominee.

But because the democratic system involves compromises from its very nature, and because the party system further makes them imperative, there has seldom been much disposition for party leaders to smash the organization rather than conform to its policy when once determined. Still more unusual is the advance threat, as now voiced by the President, that the party must follow him—or else.

It is not merely the unusual character of the challenge which will make it provocative to tens of thousands who are as well-steeped in party tradition, and as resolute in their loyalty to Democratic philosophy, as is the President. The White House has roundly condemned, has even sought to eliminate from political life, several Senators who have on occasion broken from the general position of the party. Yet, assuming an outcome unsatisfactory to him at next year's convention, Mr. Roosevelt proposes to follow the same course which he has denounced in others.

There is thus a note of real inconsistency in the declaration to the Young Democrats. And it is not lessened by the fact that Mr. Roosevelt, while saying that he does not anticipate a nomination undesirable to him, is nevertheless obviously considering the possibility. The convention may nominate a conservative, and if so, the President will sulk like Achilles in his tent. He would do this, it must be presumed, even if his wishes could command only a small minority of the convention.

Mr. Roosevelt, in other words, is proclaiming that if the Democratic Party refuses to follow his direction he will have none of it. It is a curious philosophy for a party which has always emphasized the virtues of the average man and claimed that none has the right to dictate to his fellows. It is not a philosophy which will find ready acceptance with many who were stanch Democrats before Chicago. It is, rather, the attitude of a man who is not disposed to accept the majority will when it runs against him.

Such men, whatever their virtues, have little claim to be entitled Democrats.

Covered Bridge Renaissance

From the Christian Science Monitor.

New things are important
To progress, I'm told;
But you take the new things,
And I'll take the old.

Do vanishing covered bridges refuse to vanish? There's a faint hope 'tis true.

Up in New Hampshire where such bridges are as much a part of the landscape as the streams they arch—as at Monadnock and Franconia Notch—the State Highway Department has built a new one over the Contoocook River in the towns of Hancock and Greenfield. It is a real one, too, wooden truss, 88 feet long, and wooden roof. A bridge of this type was carried away by a spring flood, but a flood of petitions for its replacement resulted in a duplicate.

Such news is in happy contrast to the stream of headlines of "Covered Bridges Passing."

In Vermont some are giving way to more modern structures, but others are being repaired and there are still more than a hundred remaining in the Green Mountain State, with more in Pennsylvania, a few in New York, some in Maine and Connecticut, and even one, at least, in California.

Why were they covered? To protect the timbers, they say, but any country boy who played in one can think of many more enduring reasons. And so can a contemporary poet:

Only the country folk, whose careless tread
Endears a dusty road, can ever know
The peaceful, clattering joy of rude planks spread

Roosevelt's Services

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What a great and wise President we have! There is a man who uses his head, and, furthermore, has the courage of his convictions and is not afraid to act. Such a man is rarely available in the public service. Talk about a third term for President Roosevelt! The Nation would be fortunate to retain his services as long as he is willing to remain in office!

Citizens of the District have reason to be grateful to the President for his recent vetoes of four District of Columbia measures. One of them would have placed the fire department on a five-day week and cost the taxpayers about $500,000 additional annually. It was fine for the firemen, but hard on the taxpayers, and came at a time when the District will be fortunate if it is able to balance its budget. Furthermore, the firemen are not overlooked and many less fortunate men would be glad to have their jobs.

Another bill would have prohibited the extension of credit to retailers in the purchase of beer. As the President pointed out, why single out this commodity for such legislation? A third bill would have enabled the Commissioners to settle small claims against the District without naming a limit. And the fourth measure would have granted retirement privileges to a former public school teacher who resigned before the retirement act was passed. All of these vetoes were eminently proper. Yet all of the bills passed both Houses of Congress and would have become laws but for the vigilance and efficiency of one man in the White House who uses his brains and realizes his responsibility.

The average member of Congress has little or no responsibility. Many bills are passed with little or no thought as to their merit or wisdom. Some get by as a result of propaganda; others through favoritism or courtesy to a fellow member, while still others are voted for with the secret hope that they may eventually fail in one way or another. It is the old story of "what is everybody's business is nobody's business"—and nobody's responsibility. Although a large majority of members of Congress are lawyers, many bills are loosely drawn and will not stand up in the courts, which is a sad reflection on those who are supposed to be gifted in the art of law making. Illogical Spending

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our Federal, State and municipal governments launched a spending campaign some five years ago, hoping to produce prosperity and good times. These Government units are spending more than ever this year, and every day the situation is growing worse financially. Unemployment is increasing. National and State liabilities are mounting to unequaled proportions. At the rate we are going, it will not be long till we will face national bankruptcy.

Whose money is being spent? Not Uncle Sam's, not the States', but the taxpayers' money. American citizens have not yet awakened to this fact. When they do something is going to happen. The Government cannot keep spending and reduce taxes. If taxes are reduced, expenditures will have to be reduced. One of the easiest things in the world to do is to spend. One of the hardest things for a legislature to do is to cut expenditures. It is popular to spend other people's money so long as you can make them believe that it is not their money you are spending while you are handing them a dole from the Government.

But the Federal and State governments have no money of their own. It is your money and my money that they are spending when they hand us a dole from the Government or when they erect public buildings or increase the salary of office holders. If Washington, the State Legislatures and the city municipalities do not stop this prolific spending, all of us will face financial chaos and disaster in the near future. No man has ever spent himself rich. The same logic in finances is equally applicable to a nation.

Privilege Or Natural Right

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Dorothy Thompson in her column of August 9, tells of the evolution of privileges into "natural rights" and of the zeal for rapid development of our resources that led government to offer special privileges to capital by way of protective tariffs, rights of way over land, monopolies of mineral resources, and what not.

She leaves out of consideration that most ancient of privileges that came over with the Mayflower and in which the Founding Fathers were themselves so much involved as to preclude them from any thought but for its preservation. Doubtless in their time and despite the teachings of Blackstone and other legal luminaries, it had come to be regarded as one of those "rights derived from nature herself" as "part of God's plan" and not a product of that medieval creation known as the feudal system that is a basic cause of Europe's perpetual unrest with periodic outbreaks of war and revolution.

If Miss Thompson has accepted the privilege of private landholding as one of those sacred rights of free-born Americans, she is but one of millions both liberal and conservative in political complexion who are blind to the fact that but for the outrageous inflation of land values the present low levels of produce values by comparison, would afford profit to the producers.

The Russian revolutionists solved their problem of private land monopoly by expropriating the land along with everything else of value. The effect has seemingly been merely to shift the masses from slavery to private landlords to slavery to the state as the one big landlord.

There is no inherent wrong in private landholding. It assures reaping where one has sown. The power it carries for Nation-wide oppression lies in the lack of its limitation to holders' use, due to the failure of society to collect the value it gives to the privilege. Were this done vast areas of idle land now in private possession would go back to the public domain, comparatively free to the unemployed as in earlier times, and to coming generations. Taxation of wealth, a deterrent to its production and a factor in its accumulation in fewer hands, bearing as it does more heavily on the poorer classes who blindly advocate it, would find place in a museum exhibit of the enemies of democracy, and equality of opportunity would be something more than a phrase in our national economy.

Government Regulation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Westbrook Pegler thinks that increasing Government regulation means that we are heading for fascism or communism. Regulation is "hostility to business." We have regulation of business but none of labor unions. That is the burden of this argument, i. e., the familiar one that the New Deal is destroying the traditional American system.

Every student of American history and economics knows that it is not Government regulation but the growth of huge corporations and the centralization of big business that have transformed American life. These giant combines must either be regulated in the interest of the commonweal or they will be our masters. Who can doubt that they were under the "Old Deal" and which of us have memories that are so short that we have forgotten the consequences? Government has vainly sought to keep up with the expanding influence of big business; let him who doubts read the story of the railroads, the oil, tobacco, aluminum, meat and coal combines. And let him follow the struggle of the American workers to organize, a struggle of terrorism and oppression on the part of American big business unmatched in any other civilized country. Pegler's silence about these things is eloquent!

So when Mr. Pegler writes that labor "can slug, slay or otherwise terrorize the workingman" but business cannot, we say "crocodile tears, Mr. Pegler." You may have forgotten a Memorial Day in Chicago, Ludlow, Homestead, or the Danbury Hatter's case. The workingman has not. And until you acquire a little more background, we suggest that the Communist and Fascist labels which spot your angry diatribes are merely serving to confuse and embitter fellow Americans who are searching for a solution of our problems. There is something essentially childish about name-calling whether the name-caller is Westbrook Pegler, John L. Lewis, Gen. Johnson or the "baby brother." Less verbiage and more intelligence would strengthen the democratic process which Mr. Pegler professes to support.

If it is fascism that bothers Mr. Pegler, then the new-found vitality of American trade-unionism ought not to worry him. He should know something of the fate of the trade-unions of Italy, Germany and Spain. No, not of the U. S. S. R.; the outstanding historians of British trade-unionism, Beatrice and Sidney Webb, are better authorities than Westbrook Pegler on this subject.

If Government ownership worries him, he ought to show some concern about the expansion of big business which causes it. I haven't seen any, so far.

FAIRER THAN ENOUGH.

Appeal to Poets

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been engaged for some time in compiling part of an anthology of contemporary verse of the English-speaking countries.

While I have had no difficulty in representing the work of the better-known poets in the section on which I am engaged, I nevertheless feel that much good verse by the more obscure singers has not been brought to my notice, in spite of the very large and comprehensive collection of manuscripts, books, magazines, cuttings, etc., to which I have had access.

It has been suggested to me that an appeal through the columns of the well-known Washington Post will reach the widest possible field in respect of the section of which I am in charge.

May I request the assistance of your readers in this matter: My address is 249 Shaftesbury avenue, London, England, W. C. 2.

Any manuscripts received by me will be carefully looked after and will receive the careful consideration of a body of competent judges of poetry.

Choice Of Color

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It looks as if we were going back to mourning of the dark ages again by the way old dame fashion is exhibiting black dresses. This is most disheartening! We hear now and then by some, "Black is so smart." If people, and especially women, would only learn the truth of these things by what the scientists and those of greater wisdom know, they would learn that individuals who continue to wear black, cannot expect health, protection or happiness for the vibration of black has none of these qualities, nor has that of destructive shades of red.

The choice of color by which one surrounds himself has a great deal to do with one's own feelings also. This is the law of life—regardless of human concepts. CONCERNED.

The Post Impressionist

Where To?

I LOCKED my front door and got in. "Potomac Stables, please."

We got a red light at the Station plaza. The bored driver looked back. "Got a extra cigarette on you?"

His bashed nose veered to the right. His bull neck stuck up informally from a sweater. The close inspection was mutual.

"You're a well set young feller. What you think bout exercises? My kid won't hold her shoulders up. I been tellin' her. My God, I nag that kid. I got a good physique. She humps over double. Me I had a swell physique kinda like a prize fighter 'til I got to drivin' this damn thing, sittin' still all day, gettin' fat, no exercise.

"Then I got all busted up in a accident. Ain't been the same since. Both legs broke, one arm busted, nose tore off. That plastic doctor put it back on. My God, he is a swell guy. Knows his business. He's gonna turn this east nose of mine north as soon as I get time.

"But I got this kid. It's drivin' me nuts. Got her in a boardin' house, but she don't do so good. Growin' and don't know nothin'. I oughta be tellin' her sumpin bout life. How in hell . . ."

I whistled and the taxi curved to me.

"Oh, so it's you? Not lately seen you, sir. Home, sir? How have you been?"

"Well, thanks, Constantine, and you"

"Me, sir? O. K. My family now not so good . . ."

"How's business?"

"I shouldn't complain, sir, but with 12 children, sir . . . and the times. Now in the old country, sir, a man has 12-14 children. Some babies die always . . . Not all 12 grow up. Before you getta well acquainted very good, some die. Here in this D. C. what happens? Baby get sick. Wife goes to clinic. Doctor pronounce bad cold, measles, pneumonia, tonsils—rush to Children's Hospital. Baby get well. All grow up . . ."

A Harlem cab was in the queue in front of the Wardman after the meeting.

The driver began at once.

"I seen the King. I seen the Queen. But what I keep studyin' is bout his brother—the one that give up his throne for a woman. Did you ever see a throne? Is it sumpin like our Capitol? My papa was a preacher. He always said 'A woman makes a preacher lay his Bible down.' She sho got aholt of that Edward and run him in the ditch. Wonder is he sorry to give up his throne?"

"How's business?"

"Doin' good. I got side lines. Some boys don't like pickin' up charladies at night from Gavment buildings. Me, I feel sorry, they feet hurts, they got a right to ride. They chip together nickel a piece jes like the D. A. R. ladies combined in the spring. Another line I got specialized in is drunks. Pick 'em up an' take 'em home. Next mornin' I come round for my money an' tell how I saved 'em from police an' disgracin' theyselves an' they is usually grateful . . . Got to eke out by specializin'. I got children to educate."

"Night work," said Patsy, "is exciting. Boy, you see what life is! Last week a girl got in my cab by herself out of a night club. Gave me a good northwest number and went dead asleep. I waked her up at her house but she wouldn't get out; had some kind of fit—just laid there. I drove her round an hour and came back. Elevator boy came out and looked at her. He said she didn't belong there. I drove her round and round some more and she got to snoring so funny I got scared so I took her to the precinct. The cops took a look and said, 'Dump her at Gallinger. Looks like a epileptic or something.' At Gallinger they said, 'You got to get a permit.' Went back to precinct. Cop said, 'Ain't you dumped that dame yet?' It was 4 o'clock a. m. before I got rid of her. I got jumpy ridin' around with her. Thought she might die on me or maybe go crazy . . . Why one night I picked up a couple of girls crying and barefooted, not a shoe, right on Connecticut . . ."

He got me out of the Union Station and with hospitable gusto he pointed out the sights en route.

"There's the Capitol. That light you see don't usually burn and when it does like tonight it signifies fil'busterin' and fil'busterin'.

"That hole in the ground back of the fence is ole Mellon's Art Gallery, cost him $5,000,000 bucks. And he pinched every penny of it. Swiped it outa one buildin' an' puttin' it in another. How? Well, he usta work in the Treasury. Plenty chance. Carried it out in bags, I reckon. They never searched him, head man, you know . . . At least, that's what everybody here says. Course here in Washington we get wise to these things. Country folks don't have no idea."

Profanity Problem

ASIDE FROM the problems which it consciously propounds and leaves unanswered, John Steinbeck's book, "Grapes of Wrath," incidentally raises another which has not been mentioned at all by the reviewers who praised the novel for its power and sympathy. That is the question whether our newspapers and magazines, and most of our authors—indeed, the whole American people—are prigs and sissies, or Steinbeck writes obscene liiterature. This book contains the dirtiest language that I have ever seen on paper. Some of the expressions which Steinbeck permits himself are reeking filth by the common standards, and it is no exaggeration to say that any newspaper or popular magazine which published such language would be annihilated by the combined anger of the clergy and the mass of conventional citizens who compose the reading public.

Even Few Samples Wouldn't Be Printed

THE RESTRAINTS which the papers and magazines impose on themselves in deference to public taste and morals, as we judge them in journalism, are such that it were tempting economic tragedy and courting jail to print representative samples out of "Grapes of Wrath," even for purposes of illustration. It would be futile to do a little sampling at this point, because the samples wouldn't make print. We think we know our public, and, moreover, our habits in writing in the papers are such that we observe the taboos instinctively.

Generally speaking, Americans have two languages, one for stag company and one for mixed. There is some overlap, to be sure, and of recent years some expressions are used in mixed company, and even by women among themselves, which formerly were held to be the exclusive property of men. Curiously, the use of such terms, even some that by common consent and general advoidance are deemed to be vile, may raise no question as to the morals of the individual who utters them. Not long ago a woman who used certain words would have been considered "loose," but now only her taste, not her morals, may be questioned on that ground, and the worst that can be said of her is that she is "no lady."

Old Euphemisms Have Given Way

IN PRINT, we have progressed, or, anyway, ventured to the point of using the word "rape" instead of the old euphemisms "statutory charge" or "criminal assault," "pregnant" instead of "in a delicate condition" or "a certain condition," and "damn" and "hell" occasionally instead of "d——" and "h——." We use the medical names of the two maladies formerly known as "social diseases," but always with the utmost solemnity, and that just about completes the list. We still use "necking," "petting" and "trysting" in place of a more exact word if "necking," "petting" and "trysting" mean what I think they mean.

What I wonder is why the people permit book writers to employ language which is familiar to practically all of us and not resented or even avoided by most men but forbid it in their papers and magazines and whether they actually do forbid us to use it in the popular prints. Maybe we wouldn't be annihilated at all, for some of the picture magazines, under a pretext of realism and education, have used photographs as naked and shocking to the old convention standards as anything which Mr. Steinbeck has done with words, and they enjoyed great popularity until the people had seen about all there is to be seen of the human race in its critical and delicate moments.

Most Americans Prefer Nice Words

BUT EVEN THOUGH this be the American language, I doubt that Mr. Steinbeck or any of his public will live until the day when it is used from the pulpit by a popular preacher or in the popular prints in little, occasional, daring single violations of the accepted code. If this is the valid American language, then Americans, for most of their reading, prefer an alien or dead one, for newspapers never get any letters from readers demanding more profanity, blasphemy and common filth. Maybe our people go into a certain mood when they pick up the paper or the Saturday Evening Post to give themselves a pleasant feeling that they are nicer than they are.

On the other hand, I think it would be amusing to go through Mr. Steinbeck's book with a pencil and substitute for his authentic American the standard awkward evasions which are used in the press and understood and approved by the public.

Hopkins Picks 7 Economist Aides

Rejuvenation Plan Will Shift Emphasis To Domestic Business

By the Associated Press

Secretary Hopkins has selected seven personal aids, all experienced in some field of economics, whose job it will be to help him rejuvenate the Commerce Department and put it in a better position to guide Administration economic policies.

Disclosing this yesterday, a department official indicated also that the work of the new group would be accompanied by a shift of emphasis in the department from foreign to domestic business problems. In the past, the department has largely emphasized promotion of foreign commerce.

Heading the staff of new aids will be Richard V. Gilbert, a public finance expert of Harvard University. Others are V. L. Bassie, former Federal Reserve Board employe; Rodney Riley, former University of Cincinnati economist; Carroll Wilson, of the New York investment council firm of Scudder, Stevens & Clark; Robert L. Davison, of the Pierce Foundation; James Hughes, former NRA construction expert, and Paul Truitt, of the Treasury.

May Appoint Others

Hopkins was said to be considering several others for the staff, but to have made no other final selection.

The work of the group, which is to be responsible solely to Hopkins, is to be divided into two sections: Guidance of Administration policy and research work on vital economic problems.

While no formal program has yet been drawn up, it was indicated the research would have to do with problems related to Government spending and lending, investment, construction, communications, public works, industries where knotty problems exist and reasons why business is lagging in some areas.

In addition, an official said, one of the functions of the new staff will be to keep in touch with leaders of trade and industry and receive their views on Government recovery measures.

Will Dispel 'Frustration'

One Commerce Department official, discussing the need for the staff of economists, said that hitherto the Commerce Department had been "out of the picture" so far as Administration policy was concerned.

Describing the new group as a "mixture of practical and theoretical people," he said the work of the new appointees would do much to dispel what he termed a "feeling of frustration" in some divisions of the department.

In this connection, he said that other Government departments had been doing research work which it was felt should have been done by the Commerce Department.

The idea of establishing the group was said to have originated with Secretary Hopkins, with whom the men will work personally.

Thomas to Name Third Senator to Liberties Group

By the Associated Press

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, announced yesterday a third Senator would be appointed to the Senate Civil Liberties Committee for the highly controversial investigation of Pacific Coast labor conditions."

Previous hearings have been conducted by only two Senators, Thomas and La Follette (Urogressives), of Wisconsin, and this fact brought a storm of angry protests in the Senate chamber at the close of the last session.

The civil liberties group is a subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee and Thomas, chairman of the labor committee, said he "had already sent out feelers on the third-place appointment."

Although Thomas declined to discuss possible appointments, it was learned Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts; Murray (Democrat), of Montana; Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma; Pepper (Democrat), of Florida; Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, and Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, are under consideration.

La Follette, chairman of the committee, is a Progressive and is classed as a Republican on the labor committee list, so the third place is certain to go to a Democrat.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

MEN WILL DEBATE the rights and wrongs of California's Vigilantes for a decade to come. Carey McWilliams' "Factories in the Field" briefly dismissed them as a species of antialien agitators. James A. B. Scherer sees them as heroes, and writes a romantic biography of a super-hero, "The Lion of the Vigilantes': William T. Coleman and the Life of Old San Francisco" (Hobbs. $3.50).

It was Robert Louis Stevenson, who gave Coleman his title. Stevenson, of course, was not in California in 1851 when the 27-year-old Coleman acted as prosecutor in the first of the Vigilantes' trigger trails, acted as assistant hangman at a second, helped save an innocent man in a third case, and, in a fourth, stormed a prison chapel to get the men the Vigilantes wanted to hang. Nor was he in California in 1856 when Coleman boldly led the volunteer committee which defied the Governor of the State and no less a military officer than William Tecumseh Sherman, and, for a time, ran California as his own judgment dictated. It was long afterward, in 1877, when Dennis Kearney was stirring San Francisco to the "sandlot riots," that Stevenson saw Coleman in action. "That Lion of the Vigilantes had but to rouse himself and shake his ears," Stevenson wrote, "and the whole brawling mob was silenced."

There was a bit more to it than that. Coleman was named chairman of the new committee of safety by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and within two days of his appointment he had raised $75,000, enrolled 5,438 armed volunteers and laid in a supply of 6,000 hickory pickaxhandles with which to meet the Kearneyites. The army of the unemployed never risked an open battle. Someone set fire to the Pacific Mail docks—the Pacific Mail was blamed for bringing Chinese immigrants in wholesale—but the mob scenes which had been forecast never took place. Perhaps Coleman's preparations frightened the mob leaders; possibly the danger had been exaggerated. At any rate, two years later California quite peacefully adopted the "radical" constitution of 1879, which stopped the Chinese immigration and attempted to reduce the great California land holdings.

MR. SCHERER writes throughout in unstinted and uncritical admiration of his hero, but he tells enough facts to permit a captious reader to form other conclusions. Coleman was a Kentuckian who came to California in the early days of the gold rush, but had the sagacity to devote himself to merchandising rather than mining. He himself said that he did not know a jackplane from a fore-plane when he proclaimed himself a building contractor, but he knew how to make money. He was not above cornering the flour supply in a hungry mining camp. So—such is human nature—he was an obvious natural leader long before the famous Vigilante committee was formed in 1851.

Those were colorful days in San Francisco, and Mr. Scherer punctuates his history of William B. Coleman with sketches of Lotta Crabtree, Lola Montez, Emperor Norton, and other picturesque characters of the period, just as he borrows liberally from Oscar Lewis' colorful story of the "Big Four" of the California railroads to liven up his account of Coleman's later days, when the former Vigilante was the most conservative of the millionaires who built their places on Nob Hill.

Coleman was suggested for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1888, but before that year was out the millionaire was bankrupt. For that Mr. Scherer blames the Cleveland tariff policy, which put borax, in which Coleman had invested heavily, on the free list. One may suspect that Cleveland was not solely responsible, and that Mr. Scherer's account of Coleman's business career lacks something of essential detail. For Mr. Scherer is a wholesouled enthusiast. To Coleman more than to any other one man, he argues, San Francisco "owes the widely remarked fact that it never knows when it is beaten, and its pervasive atmosphere of independence and democracy and its tingling life." Those qualities San Francisco has; but it seems hardly fair to make the Lion of the Vigilantes responsible for them all.

"WHERE IS "DOWN EAST?" I say it's Maine. But the latest part—"Dewberry to Emporium" (University of Chicago Press, $4)—of the learned "Dictionary of American English on Historical Principles" says that all New England is "Down East." Perhaps it once was; the Chicago scholars buttress their verdict with a quotation from the Massachusetts Spy, which, in 1837, said that Dennis, on Cape Cod, was "Down East;" with another citation of a Missourian who, in 1837, referred to a freeholder of Barkhamstead, Conn., as a "Down Easter;" and a third reference to that neglected masterpiece of Robert Montgomery Bird's "Nick of the Woods, or the Jibbenainosay" (1837).

Bird was Delaware-born and Pennsylvania-bred, and it is possible that Down East was once as elastic a term as Yankee is today. To an Englishman, as is well known, any American is a Yankee; to a Southerner, a Yankee is a Northerner; and the Middle West uses "Yankee" and "New Englander" as synonyms . . . Perhaps the meaning of "Down East" still varies with the speaker's distance from the Atlantic seaboard or from New England, but to my ear it means Maine, and Maine alone.

For the rest, the new volume in this always entertaining lexicon offers relatively little new to the explorer of the American language. Among our additions to the English tongue it lists dicker, dido, dime, dingbat, discumbobulate and dumfoozle, Dixie (as to whose disputed derivation it refuses to decide), doughnuts, dude, dude-ranch, dude-puncher and dudine, dugout (either as a canoe or as a cave), eggnog, electrocute, elevator (where the English say "lift") and emancipation, the first use of which in connection with the freeing of slaves is accredited to that great Americanist, Thomas Jefferson. It omits dumbbell as the word is most frequently used, and defines doghouse only as a kennel or a caboose.

New Deal Test Ahead

By Mark Sullivan

Recovery Is Crux

MUCH OF THIS controversy between President Roosevelt and the orthodox Democrats, much of next year's Presidential politics as a whole—much of the fate of America—depends on what develops about business and recovery during the coming months. About this, President Roosevelt has taken a position that almost commits him. With deliberate impressiveness, in two successive press conferences, and in other authoritative ways, Mr. Roosevelt has made business recovery, or the lack of it, the test of his political fortunes. He has asked the country to judge the controversy between him and Congress by whether there is recovery during the coming months. He says that what he wanted to do would have brought recovery—and that the refusal to Congress to let him do what he wanted tends to prevent recovery. If there is not recovery, then, he says, he will be proved right.

From this position taken by Mr. Roosevelt, there is a clear inference, completely logical, completely practicable. This inference is likely to be made by the country, and it is practically certain to be acted upon by the Democratic Party.

If Recovery Comes, President Was Wrong

IF THERE IS NOT recovery, then Mr. Roosevelt is right. In this event, Mr. Roosevelt has justification for requiring the Democratic Party to accept his domination, for dictating the Democratic nomination, either of himself or of some New Dealer of his choice. From the position Mr. Roosevelt takes, if there is no recovery, then he has justification for asking the country, in the election next year, to elect himself or a New Dealer of his choice, to give him a Congress of his choice and to go on with the New Deal. All this flows from the position Mr. Roosevelt takes.

But if there is recovery, then Mr. Roosevelt was wrong. In that event, Mr. Roosevelt has no claim on the Democratic nomination, whether for himself or for a New Dealer of his choice. Then Mr. Roosevelt has no reason to ask the country to go on with the New Deal.

This pair of alternatives, arising from the position Mr. Roosevelt has taken, puts him almost in the position of hoping there will be no recovery—although it should be added that Mr. Roosevelt specifically disavows this; he says he hopes he will be proved wrong, and that there will be recovery.

Would Not Work Against Revival

LET NO ONE assume too strongly that Mr. Roosevelt, personally, would consciously and deliberately set himself against recovery, or would welcome the possible result of failure of recovery, which might be the destruction of the American system of privately owned business.

Always there has been too great readiness to assume that Mr. Roosevelt, dislikes the American system and would like to see it supplied by another. There is not space here to set down the refinements and intricacies—both of economic theory and of Mr. Roosevelt's personal temperament—which would be necessary to a full exposition of Mr. Roosevelt's attitude about the American system, and the effect his attitude has on it.

The real reson for the harm Mr. Roosevelt has done the American system, and the danger he still is to it, is to be found in one of the most illuminating sentences ever written about him. It is written by Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, who is close to Mr. Roosevelt—Mr. Lindley has written a friendly biography of the President and has been chosen by him as one of the advisory committee for the museum in which Mr. Roosevelt's papers are to be preserved.

Roosevelt 'Lacks' Economic Thinking

MR. LINDLEY says: "It has always been difficult to get the President to think in economic terms——."

Mr. Lindley said that because the facts called on him to say it. He was careful to add, as part of the same sentence, by way of tactfully sweet emolient: —"he thinks primarily in political and moral terms." If there were occasion, one would feel obliged to say something about the morality of some of the steps Mr. Roosevelt has taken in public matters. But all we need here is Mr. Lindley's clear and correct statement about Mr. Roosevelt's lack of economic thinking.

The harm Mr. Roosevelt has done has been due not to his conscious adoption of wrong economic policies but to his failure to know the distinction between wrong ones and right ones. By and large he has adopted as many right ones as wrong ones. But the two have interfered with each other, in some cases neutralized each other. And that has produced the chaotic confusion that is the cause of our economic semiparalysis, which, after six years of the New Deal, is becoming chronic. If this semiparalysis continues long enough, almost certainly the American system will die, and we shall get one of the new European collectivist and authoritarian systems.

Some High Officials Dislike Present System

BECAUSE Mr. Roosevelt does not understand economic ideas, he accepts them from others—without realizing the effect they will have. Some of his ideas have come, directly or indirectly, from sources who do not like the American system, or who lean toward a collectivist system; or who, as some of them express it, doubt if the "capitalist system," as they call it, can survive or its worth saving.

Some of these sources are now in a position where they can, to a large degree, influence the outcome ahead. Some have power now, because Mr. Roosevelt has put them in office, in positions where they can exercise influence, as between recovery, which might end their power, and lack of recovery, which might perpetuate their power. Almost they can, if they wish, ignore the President himself. Even if Mr. Roosevelt should say, "do everything for recovery," they, secure in their official positions, could, if they chose to be recalcitrant, follow policies that impede recovery.

Between The Devil...

By Barnet Nover

Nations In The Path Of The Axis

THE SMALL NATIONS living along the periphery of the Berlin-Rome axis find themselves in a most unhappy plight. They are desperately anxious to avoid incurring the ill will of the totalitarian powers. But they are discovering that friendship toward the axis pays no dividends in real security.

In other words, what happened to Albania and Slovakia yesterday may, the leaders in Belgrade and Budapest realize, happen to Hungary and Yugoslavia tomorrow.

Albania was already an Italian pawn when Mussolini launched his attack on that backward Balkan kingdom. Slovakia's leaders made a pilgrimage to Berchtesgaden to plead with Hitler to free their people from the Czech yoke.

They have since discovered how much better it was to be ruled from Prague than from Berlin. Slovak autonomy is a complete fiction. The country is utterly impoverished. Too late, the people and the leaders of the protectorate are discovering that the nation they needed to be protected against was not Czechoslovakia but Germany.

YUGOSLAVIA lies outside the orbit of the British-created peace front. She has an alliance with France of many years' standing. But the terms of that alliance are vague and, moreover, provide not the slightest guarantee against a threat from the direction of the Third Reich. And to the west, northwest and southwest lies the Italian empire.

Under Stoyadinovitch, Yugoslavia went out of its way to establish cordial relations with Germany and Italy. His successors have not altered this policy. But the fact that Yugoslavia has refrained from any act of opposition or hostility to the axis does not mean that she is safe from aggression. In the opinion of the totalitarian dictators those who are not with them—i. e., those who refuse to do their bidding—are against them.

The other day, according to Belgrade reports, Germany and Italy demanded that Yugoslavia agree, in the event of a European war, to permit the axis to use her railways and her military bases, direct her economic life and give those powers complete access to her raw materials and foodstuffs.

The Belgrade government refused. To agree to such terms would make Yugoslavia, in effect, an ally of the axis. This neither the Belgrade leaders nor the Yugoslav people desire. In view of the very definite democratic sympathies of large sections of the Yugoslav population and their suspicions of Germany and Italy, submission to the dictates of Berlin and Rome would probably split Yugoslavia apart. She already has trouble enough, what with the still unsolved problem of Croatian autonomy. In insisting on maintaining her autonomy, Yugoslavia is literally taking her life in her hands.

HER POSITION is between the devil and the deep blue sea. The same is true of Hungary.

To a very much greater extent than her South Slav neighbor, Hungary is already in the orbit of the axis. Her relations with Italy have long been friendly. So have her relations with the Third Reich which absorbs a large part of her surplus agricultural production. Moreover, Hungary is a signatory of the anti-Comintern pact.

There is every reason to believe that the Budapest government will do nothing directly or deliberately to antagonize Berlin. Yet she now faces the possibility of, in greater or lesser fashion, suffering the fate of Slovakia.

HUNGARY happens to be the most convenient route for a German thrust in the direction of Rumania. If the present stalemate persists at Danzig, Chancellor Hitler may decide to move southeast rather than northeast. That means going through Hungary, whether the Magyars like it or not.

The Magyars happen to have their own particular grievances against Rumania which, since the disappearance of Czechoslovakia and the restoration to Hungary of some of the territory lost to that republic, has become Hungary's principal bete noire. But it is doubtful if they are willing, even with the promise of ultimate territorial aggrandizement held out before them by the Third Reich, to play the role of Germany's catspaw.

THEY MAY, however, have little to say about it. The totalitarian powers never bother to consult the wishes of their victims. But Italy may have something to say about it. For it would hardly suit Italy's ultimate interests in Europe to have Hungary become another Slovakia.

However, the force of Italy's potential veto of Germany's expansionist plans is most uncertain. She may not be able to safeguard Hungary's independence against German pressure, even should she desire to do so. For in all respects but her greater size and importance Italy's position is not dissimilar to that of Germany's smaller neighbors while the ambitions of Mussolini compel her to maintain the axis at almost all costs.

Warplanes Stage Raid at Manassas

against the defenders all morning. The high command ruled a frontal attack inadvisable, remembering the bloody attempts to scale the steep banks of the stream in Civil War days.

Instead, the Richmond "Blues," first battalion of Col. J. Fulmer Bright's First Virginia Infantry, began an enveloping movement around the "Black's" left. At the same time, the First Maryland Infantry Regiment, under Brig. Gen. John D. Markey, began a similar but much wider movement on the other end of the line.

Markey was given until noon to make his flanking movement and had his troops in position with 15 minutes to spare. At noon, the division attacked in force. The Richmond "Blues" also had flanked the enemy, crossing Bull Run to the south. With machine gun and rifle fire resounding through the rolling Virginia hills, the battle began.

Alexandrians Begin Charge

Alexandrians of Company I, First Virginia Infantry, were the first troops to cross the stream in the face of the enemy. They charged across Ball's Ford, splashing through the knee-deep water sounding the "Rebel yell." Capt. Guy Anders, sheriff of Frederick County, and his company of north Maryland boys, who had been guarding the ford since early morning fell back on orders from "Black" Commander Harward.

The fifth Maryland also was engaged in stiff fighting along Lee highway, and 116th Virginia, many of them from the mountain counties, managed to scale the banks of Bull Run and engaged the enemy.

After the "Blacks" had fallen back, the battle was halted without Markey's Regiment, poised for a decisive attack on the enemy's flank, getting into action. Although the men had been fed in the field before the battle, division headquarters, moved to an advance position for the battle, decided the objectives of the maneuver had been met.

Washingtonians Captured

During the early phases of the battle, the "Blacks" captured several detachments of the attacking force. A reconnaissance unit under Capt. H. D. Ives, of Company L, Fifth Maryland Infantry, were taken prisoners as they almost walked onto Maj. Harward's headquarters. Capt. C. R. Connally, of Washington, D. C., a military intelligence officer attached to Gen. Reckord's staff was captured with Ives.

The latter nearly made his escape later in the morning, stealing the "Black" commander's car, but was stopped by outposts and returned to custody.

Three officers and a dozen or more men of the 121st Engineers, under Capt. William F. Jorgensen, were also captured when they attempted to repair a bridge in the advance sector.

District Commissioners Hazen and McCoach arrived at camp tonight as guests of the 121st Engineers, District of Columbia National Guard.

Col. Walter Burns' District anti-aircraft regiment operated its searchlights and guns in the aerial demonstration with skeleton crews. Most of the outfit attended a regimental dance at the Haymarket High School. Wives and sweethearts of the men were transported to the party and taken home in the huge, lumbering trucks of the unit.

Tomorrow reviews are scheduled and nothing Sunday, so the 17,000 Guardsmen of the corps can rest up for the big "war" against the regulars starting early Monday morning.

The Once Over

Fall Style Notes

It seems too good to be true, but milliners have decided to stop getting women's hats from the comic strips. Hats are to be wearable this fall and winter instead of amusing.

Alan A. Wells, sales promotion manager, addressing a convention of milliners, declared that "American women are tired of being made to look like pixies, zanies and Andalusians." This is highly questionable, but it would seem that they might be ready to accept bonnets in which the comic effect would be secondary.

"I cling to a belief that women will not deliberately make fools of themselves," said Mr. Wells. Does he wanna bet?

Any man who could cling to a belief like that couldn't have been outdoors much during the last two years.

Never before was such a madhouse millinery in demand. The girls seemed to go for anything that would give them the appearance of something that had come from a haunted house in great haste.

Mothers went around looking like cubist ball addicts, and even grandma wore a hat that was out of place everywhere except on the tail of a kite.

But enough is enough, even in the millinery business. Not that its members are sensitive. They are probably influenced by a realization that the market is so flooded with funny hats that business can only be stirred by a style swing in the opposite direction.

Don't think the women of America are to get a complete pardon, however. What they are spared in the matter of hats will be made up for in dresses and coats. The new Paris designs feature the "bustle."

(The curtain will be lowered for 10 minutes to denote a lapse of 40 years.)

You remember those old tintypes of Aunt Jennie all dressed up to go roller skating. Well, the main reason for that funny look was the bustle. It gave her that old rumbleseat effect. We thought it gone forever with the magic lantern, the hand-stitched wall motto and home-made bread. But the smart designers are bringing it back.

Not only are the latest skirts made with bustle attached, but (brace yourself, Clara, for the blow) they are a feature of both cloth and fur coats!

With a bustle on her skirt and a bustle on her coat it's going to be hard to tell whether the well-dressed girl is walking or just sliding into second base under a capacity load.

Muffs are coming back in Paris, too. Quick, papa, the pearl derby, the button shoes and the skin-tight trousers! Goofy days are here again.

Back Home Stuff

Dear Hi—Dammit, I never did like to file cuts; but I didn't expect that it was going to haunt me for years. I probably filed Mayor Studley's cut under Oneto's Fruit Store, and the picture of the new railroad depot was filed under "Louis's Hamburger Stand." If any one should happen to ask you, I didn't come from Branford, but I came from Cedar street, on the Hill Section, where the Irish held forth, and I got my good pair of legs trying to keep out of the way of Mattie Powers—the fastest cop on the force, whom I led a merry chase when I was only 12 years old, halfway around the hospital block.

You might credit my early training with printer's ink to my association with Bert Sedgwick, Bill Barry, Buck Buchanan and O. W. White, in addition to yourself. And I claim the distinction of being the first white radio announcer for the Register, when, during the Jeffries-Johnson fight, I ran the copy from the A. P. office, on Orange street, over to the Register and megaphoned it to the waiting crowd. I think that was about 1912—which certainly dates you!

De HavenExpenses For Wives Doubled

Los Angeles, Aug. 11 (AP).—Carter de Haven's bill for supporting the women he has married doubled today.

Mrs. Evelyn Burd de Haven, seeking a divorce after ten years of marriage, was granted $100 a month for herself and their son, David George, 8. She had sought $350 monthly from the veteran actor and writer, now salesman for a development concern at the desert resort of Palm Springs.

De Haven, opposing her demand, said his income is $243.50 a month and he already is paying $100 to Flora Parker de Haven, from whom he was divorced in 1928.

Salvage Fleet Fixes Pontoons to Squalus

Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 11 (AP).—A Navy salvage fleet swung at anchor above the submarine Squalus tonight awaiting only tomorrow's dawn to attempt to lift the sunken vessel from her bed of deep ocean mud. Six pontoons tugged gently at the Squalus' stern and bow pulled at chains and cables looped beneath her bow.

Danish Minister Takes Apartment at Shoreham

Henrik de Kauffmans Delay Opening Of Quarters at Legation on Belmont Street; Friends Await Mrs. O'Donnell's Return

Perhaps because Washington heat is enough to cope with, the newly-named Minister of Denmark and Mme. Henrik de Kauffmann, have decided not to set up housekeeping at the legation on Belmont street until some time after their arrival here. Instead, they have taken an apartment at the Shoreham, where they will go immediately upon arrival about August 20.

M. de Kauffman sailed from Oslo, where he was previously stationed, the same day that the former Danish envoy, Otto Wadsted, who's been transferred to Rome, took off from New York for Copenhagen. He and Mme. Wadsted will spend some time there before going to the Italian capital.

Mme. de Kauffmann is already in this country, and is visiting her sister, Mrs. Mason Sears of Dedham, Mass., at North Haven, Me. Mme. de Kauffmann is an American, the daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. William Dugald MacDougall, of Washington.

The new Minister will arrive in New York August 18, on the steamship Oslofjord, and will be met by his wife. They will spend one or two days in New York before coming on here with their two daughters.

New Minister Fond of Sports

M. de Kauffmann, who has served in this country before, is described as an ardent sportsman, particularly fond of horseback riding, swimming and mountain climbing.

M. and Mme. de Kauffmann will arrive in Washington's dullest season, but they will find many diplimats at their desks. Several Ambassadors are staying here over the week-ends, among them the Italian Ambassador, Prince Colonna, and the French envoy, Count de Saint Quentin. The Finnish Minister, Hjalmar Procope, has returned from a stay in Massachusetts, but would like to learn of a quiet hotel nearby where he can escape the heat for the next day or so.

Others lingering in the Capital doldrums include Mrs. George Pulver and Mrs. George T. Pettingill, wife of the Commandant of the Navy Yard. Mrs. Pulver, who has been here all summer, expects to leave next week for York Harbor, Me., to visit her mother, Mrs. Alexander Legare. Mrs. Pettingill has postponed going away for a vacation until her son, William Pettingill, leaves next month to study flying at Pensacola. He is to begin taking lessons on Tuesday at nearby Anacostia. In the course of duty, he probably often will circle over the home of his parents at the Navy Yard.

Romberg—Spreckels Rites Of Interest Here

Friends of Mrs. Hugh O'Donnell are looking forward to her return from California to hear all about the surprise marriage on Thursday of Baroness Maximilian Hugo Converse Wilhelm von Romberg, of Santa Barbara, to wealthy Adolph Spreckels, jr., heir to a fortune in sugar. Mrs. O'Donnell has been visiting the baroness in her modern white house in Santa Barbara.

There's quite a Washington angle to the marriage, as the fourth Mrs. Spreckels is a frequent visitor to the Capital. She was here for several weeks last spring as the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. J. Bennett Noble, in their apartment at the Kennedy-Warren.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hubbard Hall, of New York, and Santa Barbara, and is the widow of Baron von Romberg, killed in a plane crash last year in Connecticut. This was just after the couple had built their handsome new house in Santa Barbara, which they had planned themselves.

Mrs. Spreckels is a striking person who likes to go in for unusual hats and clothes. Her dark, curly hair is cropped close to her head. During the past year she has become very much interested in modern art and in gradening. She hobnobs with many of the Hollywood actors and actresses, whom she has frequently entertained at her Santa Barbara residence.

Depasta and prominent members of the Greek colony here.

The Rev. Amilianos Lalusis will perform the ceremony, which is somewhat similar to the picturesque Russian one. Cabinet Families Vacationing In Widely Separated Regions

Hulls at White Sulphur Springs, Woodrings Nearing Panama and Morgenthaus Are Touring Denmark

Members of the Cabinet, for the most part, have scattered to the four winds in search of relaxation.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, who have been at the Greenbriar in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., are remaining at the Spa for an indefinite period. Although this is the first bit of respite the hard-working Secretary has had from his arduous official duties it may be cut short at any time by developments in the foreign situation.

Landing in Panama sometime this week-end are the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, who, with their three small children, Marcus, Melissa and Cooper Coolidge, sailed last week for a three-week jaunt. The Secretary will return to his desk at the War Department around August 23, while Mrs. Woodring and the children journey up to Fitchburg, Mass., to be guests of Mrs. Woodring's parents, former Senator and Mrs. Marcus Coolidge.

Morgenthaus Visiting Denmark

Visiting Denmark are the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., who with their family, sailed recently for a tour of the Scandinavian countries. While in Copenhagen and the surrounding territory the Secretary is inspecting the excellent dairy farms there. Although the Morgenthau farm in Fishkill, N. Y., is noted for its fruits, the Secretary does go in for dairy farming in a small way and undoubtedly will find his inspection tour both interesting and informative.

The Morgenthaus will sail on the Normandie September 6 for home. Shipmates will be the Postmaster General, James A. Farley, and his two daughters, Betty and Ann, also touring Europe. Meanwhile, Mrs. Farley is on the West Coast, where she is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George Marshall. Mrs. Marshall is the former Corinne Griffith of screen fame.

An exception to this rule of "vacationing Cabinet members is the Attorney General, Frank Murphy. Mr. Murphy, although planning a trip in the near future, is remaining close to his desk over the week-end.

Back since the first of this week from Hungry Mother State Park in Virginia are the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Harold Ickes. They are at their farm near Olney, Md.

Congressmen Remain Here Brief While

Many Able to Start Home Only in the Last Few Days

Although much muttering about wanting to go home could be heard up on "the hill" last week before Congress adjourned, it seems many members of Congress didn't dash madly back to their own firesides, after all. As a matter of fact, a few remain to hold the fort, while others have been able to get away only within the last few days.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, who left several days ago to join his family in Cheyenne, Wyo., will return soon to his apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel. Senator Alva B. Adams left Thursday for Colorado, but is expected to return before Congress convenes.

Agriculture Chief and Wife Attend Ceremony in Des Moines Church; Bridegroom's Sister Is Maid of Honor

In an impressive ceremony yesterday morning in the Plymouth Congregational Church, at Des Moines, Iowa, Miss Florence Kling was married to Henry Browne Wallace, son of the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, who were there for the wedding. Miss Kling is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louise Kling, of Kellogg, Iowa.

The church was decorated with baskets filled with gladioli and fern. Palms graced the chancel and small clusters of flowers decked the candle-lit altar.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown with a white satin skirt, ending in a train, and a bodice of Chantilly lace with short puffed sleeves. Her fingertip veil was held in place by a Juliet cap of seed pearls, and she carried a bouquet of white gardenias and pale blue dephinium.

Wearing a pale blue net frock over taffeta, Miss Jean Wallace, sister of the bridegroom, attended as maid of honor. The gown was made over a hoop skirt with a shirred bodice and short puffed sleeves. The underskirt of taffeta was threaded with three narrow bands of pink velvet ribbon. She wore a pink bow in her hair, from which fell short streamers, and she carried pink roses and blue delphinium.

Also attending the bride were Miss Elloise Reasoner, of Des Moines, and Mrs. Russell Cobbs, of Newton, Iowa. They were gowned like the maid of honor.

Bride's Sister Junior Attendant

Miss Mary Alice Kling, 11-year-old sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid, and a younger sister, Dorothy Kling, was flower girl. They were dressed alike in frocks of white net with full skirts and deep flounces. The round necklines were trimmed with pale blue ribbon bows and they wore blue sashes as well as blue ribbons in their hair. The junior bridesmaid carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses and blue delphinium, while the flower girl carried a basket of pink rose petals.

Henry Kling, of Kellogg, Iowa, brother of the bride, was best man. Ushers included Robert Wallace, brother of the bridegroom; James Browne, of San Francisco, cousin of Mr. Wallace; Simon Casady, jr., and Herb Plambeck, of Des Moines.

Following the wedding a reception was held in the lounge of the church. The buffet table was centered with gladioli and a large wedding cake.

Couple to Live In Des Moines

When Mr. Wallace and his bride left on their wedding trip she wore a blue-gray rayon traveling outfit with a full skirt, navy belt and accessories. Her bag, however, was of cyclamen.

Upon their return the young couple will make their home at 1152 Twenty-first street, Des Moines. Mr. Wallace is associated with a firm in Johnston, Iowa.

The bride will complete her course in law next year at Drake University. She is a member of Delta Gamma Sorority. She was formerly president of Theta Sigma Phi Journalism Sorority and a member of the senior board of the Women's League.

Mr. Wallace was graduated from Iowa State College and is a member of Alpha Gamma Rho Fraternity. He also attended Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Miss Edgerton Becomes Bride

The marriage of Miss Muriel Robinette Edgerton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Clark Edgerton, and William Lawrence Gorman, took place yesterday afternoon at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart. The Rev. John S. Spence officiated. Mr. Gorman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Joseph Gorman.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white net made over satin with insertions of lace. The bodice was of white lace made with short puffed sleeves. Her veil was held in place by a coronet of pearls. She carried bride roses.

Upon their return from their honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Gorman will make their home at 1903 Key boulevard, Arlington, Va.

Latvia Delegation To Start Flurry Of Entertaining

The arrival of a Latvian trade delegation the end of September or first of October will doubtless be the signal for a flurry of early autumn entertaining. The members will leave their homeland September 20 and will arrive in New York the last part of the month.

The Latvian Minister, Dr. Alfred Bilmanis, is vacationing at Atlantic City until early next month. His wife, who is summering in Latvia, will join him here probably about the time the trade delegation arrives.

Briton Marries Ellen Do Howes

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin A. Howes, of this city, have announced the wedding on Thursday in London of their daughter, Ellen Dench Howes, to John Alfred Ralph Pimlott, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Pimlott, of Southsea, Portsmouth, England. The ceremony took place in Christ Church, and the couple will make their home in London. Their engagement was announced several weeks ago.

The bride, who with her parents formerly resided in Scarsdale, N. Y., studied at Smith and Radcliffe and spent the past year at the Corcoran Art School. Mr. Pimlott, an Oxford graduate, is one of the secretaries to Sir Samuel Hoare. He visited Washington in 1936 as an expert in social welfare, and is the author of "Toynbee Hall: Fifty Years of Social Progress." The Hall to London is something like Hull House is to Chicago.

Mr. Howes, father of the bride, is chief of materials and specifications in the United States Housing Authority. Her mother is the former Ethel Puffer, writer on esthetics and women's education. She is the sister of Mrs. Laura Puffer Morgan.

Mr. and Mrs. Rene M. La Montagne, of Southampton, Long Island, have announced the engagement of Mrs. La Montagne's daughter, Miss Dorothy McMurray, to Charles W. Ganzel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert K. Ganzel, of Wollaston, Mass.

The bride-elect, the daughter of William McMurray, was graduated from the Spence School and made her debut in the summer of 1936. Earle McMurray is her brother. Her stepfather, Mr. La Montagne, is a prominent polo player, and in 1914 represented this country on the International Four. Mary Haworth's Mail

Husband's Sloppy Habits Cause Wife to Nag Him; They Are Drifting Apart; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 32, neat and attractive. My husband is 40 and a college graduate. We have been married four years and have a little girl aged 2. My husband finds one fault with me. He says I am a nagger. I don't want to be a nagger and every day while he is at work I think, "tonight will be different." I know that a woman is supposed to feed a man's ego, but I am not the kind who can praise unless I have something to praise.

I often think if he would do things right for one week I would be so happy I could overlook things for months. I could respect him with the thought that, "Well, he can do things right if he wants to." But as it is, I feel that he is just plain stupid and lazy. I am busy all day long with the home (in which I take great pride) and with our darling baby. I don't expect him to take the place of a maid when he comes home, but there are little things he could do which would save me so much—if I didn't have to remind him, over and over again, how to do them.

Here are some things I would like to expect of him: Wash baby's hands when dinner is ready. Pull down shades in our room when he is leaving in the morning. Empty trash baskets. Keep the car clean. Keep himself immaculate, instead of bathing only twice a week. Leave his pipe outside the bathroom, instead of coming out smelling like a boiled ham. Keep his nails clean. Take heed of simple mistakes in grammar, such as "he don't," "my feet are froze," etc. Get a shoe shine oftener than once a month. And, oh, so many, many other things. I suppose reminding him of these things is nagging, but I'm not doing it because I like it. I only want him to help me a little and at the same time be pleasing to other people as well as to me.

And I wish he'd stop snickering when the little girl does something for which she needs disciplining, and saying, "she's your match," etc. He never reads anything on child psychology and while I take Parents Magazine I don't believe he has as much as looked at one copy . . . There seems to be so little we can talk about and I seldom get away from home, but I do read and listen to the radio . . .

As for money, clothes, recreation and such things, he gives as freely as he can. He is good-natured (too good-natured, as he never gets angry) and never seems to dislike anything or anybody. Since the baby was born, he has been impotent. He has seen a doctor but the condition has not improved . . . If you say I am making mountains out of molehills, I'll try hard to overlook these things. But if you think I am justified, then what can I do to spur my husband into a more co-operative attitude? I am so unhappy, with all my emotions pent up inside of me all the time. Very sincerely.

UNHAPPY WIFE.

Mistaken Marriage

DEAR UNHAPPY WIFE: I get the impression that your husband is a pretty good sort, in his way, who got roped in, unfortunately, by the wrong woman. He should have married some robust damsel who really liked him for what he was—instead of that finicky perfectionist who is yourself, who probably figured that he might possibly do, when you had finished making him over.

What your problem amounts to is this—you have married a man you don't really like. The relationship is devoid of those elements which make for cordial friendship. This isn't to say that you don't recognize his good points, but they leave you cold. Nor that you weren't strongly attracted to him physically, perhaps, during courtship and the earlier months of marriage.

But it is perfectly possible, as most self-aware individuals know, to be physically attracted by a person of the opposite sex whom one doesn't particularly admire, who could never lay lasting hold on one's affections, and who may even be an utter bore, socially and intellectually, according to one's individual standards of what constitutes a bore.

Because, fundamentally, you don't like him, all of his inevitable idiosyncracies (everyone has them) grate on your nerves; rub your fur the wrong way, as the saying goes. Your list of grievances against him (which, as you say, could be enlarged ad infinitum) might be construed as being as much of an indictment of yourself as of the person accused. The fact that you harp on them, holding your husband to blame for being simply what he is, certainly warrants his muted counter-charge that you are a nagger.

I imagine, indeed, that his impotency is the net result of your interminable nagging and ill-concealed dissatisfaction with anything and everything about him. Pounded by criticism day in and day out by the woman he loved (whom he had supposed loved him) the poor man's ego has shriveled gradually to the vanishing point. He probably lacks the will and the courage for the lover's role. And this either because he resents your attitude, unconsciously, or because he feels himself unworthy to touch the hem of your garments.

What's to be done? That's a large order. It's axiomatic that you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, so it's doubtful whether your husband could ever be induced to conform wholly to the pattern you have set for him. On the other hand, it's equally doubtful whether you could revise your temperament sufficiently to indulge his shortcomings (as you see them) affectionately. However, another sort of woman, or a woman who sincerely liked him, wouldn't find them so intolerably objectionable as you do.

For instance, a genuinely doting wife wouldn't expect a hard-working husband to "wash baby's hands for dinner." She'd do it herself, as a matter of course, and to make baby a sweeter armful for father. When she drew down the shades after father had left for the office in the morning, she'd smile tenderly at this reminder of his bachelor sloppiness, and think how much better cared for he was today.

She'd empty her own trash baskets, as part of her housewifely duties; take it upon herself to see that he had an extra pair of shoes always shined and ready; get a neighborhood jack-of-all-trades to keep the car clean; would think it rather cute of her husband to hang on to his pipe, even in the bathroom, and make a joke of the fact that he smelled, in consequence, "like a boiled smoked ham" after a bath, and would eventually cajole him, with anaesthetic doses of flattery, into the habits of a nightly tub or morning shower and weekly manicure.

Frankly, I am of the opinion that the fundamental conflict of temperaments in this marriage can never be erased; that it is a marriage which should never have been made, and that if it is to weather the years, you must do the lion's share of adjusting since you are today doing the lion's share of quarrelling and aggressive trouble making.

Finally, with regard to your husband's impotency and your concomitant nervous tension, I think you should see a psychiatrist together. When he has reviewed the situation in detail, he can tell you what the chances are of relieving this crucial estrangement. And, also, how to correct it, if it can be remedied. If it cannot be corrected, you must then face the question of the moral propriety versus the socio-economic advisability of perpetuating a union which has been stripped of its greatest significance.

For Roof Dining and Dancing

As these long, hot evenings continue to lead night owls out supper dancing on starlit roofs, the cool sheer dinner dress gathers importance. Here's why. The same girl poses for us above and at right in a black silk marquisette, inserted with filmy bands of lace. It is a lovely frock unto itself. But—when distinctive hand-fashioned jewelry and a rich evening bag of ancient Egyptian brocade are added, a purely personal conquest in dress is achieved

Anyone Can Have Exquisite Hands, Says Miss Hopkins

Hollywood, Calif.—Miriam Hopkins, who portrays a lady of the Civil War era in "The Old Maid," maintains that the true secret of exquisite hands belongs exclusively to the twentieth century.

Miriam's hands are lovely not only because of their fine grooming and good contour but also because she has learned to gesture naturally and gracefully with them.

"Poised hands" must be well groomed or the owner will be self-conscious of them, avers Miriam. So her rigid rules are a weekly professional manicure, the removal of polish when she cleanses her face of make-up at bedtime, frequent soap shampoos with a little scrubbing brush, the use of fine hand lotion or her own combination of rosewater and glycerine after each laving, nightly applications of softening cream on knuckles and around nails and a special emollient massaged into the base of the nail

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Small Waist Necessary for Fall Frocks Should Measure 8 to 10 Inches Less Than Bust; Exercise Will Do the Trick

TRY TO THINK back . . . when you were 21 years old? more than it used to measure? figures, get out the tape and compare the bust and waist measurements as they are now. The waist shouldn't be less than eight inches less than the bust.

Unless you can pass one or the other of those waistline tests, the fall fashions spell trouble! If the designers know there is such a thing as a thick waist, there's no indication that they do. All the newest styles focus attention on the slimly tapering waist. It's taken for granted that your waist is a good eight inches less than the bust, maybe nine or ten inches less.

Such optimism on the part of the designers is bound to result in some unusual activity. You can wait (assuming your waist is a mite over the limit) and let out the seams of your new frock, or you can start now and take some tucks in your own waist. You'll feel and look better for the latter. First of all, you will acquire a firm feeling in the mid-section, instead of the loose sloppy feeling that goes with lazy muscles. Then, suddenly, you will lok trimmer, and from then on you can nip the waist in amazingly.

Exercises Reduce Waist

Your exercises will work faster if you can concentrate the movement in the waistline muscles. To keep from moving the shoulders in the stretching exercises, a wand may be held in the upstretched hands. Unscrew the handle of your carpet sweeper and use it as a wand in the following exercise:

Stand on the knees on the floor, hips tucked under and arms stretched overhead. The wand should be grasped near the ends in either hand. Bend sideward, to the left, and, keeping the hips tucked under, the wand straight overhead, slowly sit down at the right of the feet. Try to return to position without lowering the wand.

Minimum of Movement

Here is an exercise that cuts the waste motion down to a minimum:

Try to sit on the floor between the legs, the wand stretched overhead. Bend to alternate sides, as far as possible, and see how close you can bring the end of the wand to the floor. Needless to say, that is a difficult exercise. Right at first, you may feel you have accomplished quite a bit if you can sit down on the floor between the legs. First, stand on the knees, feet back. Have the knees fairly wide apart and make use of the thigh and hip muscles in sitting down.

If that is beyond you, stand erect with the feet fairly wide apart, hips tucked under, and bend acutely sideward to place alternate ends of the wand on the floor at the outside of the feet.

You'll have to exercise for a trim waist, and these suppling exercises can't be excelled for putting tucks in this measurement.

Men's Mistakes In Clothes Are Listed by Author

Philadelphia, Pa.—Ten mistakes men make most often in wearing clothes are listed by Marjorie Hillis—the "Live Alone and Like It" author who was married this month—in "We Notice Men's Clothes, Too" in the September Ladies Home Journal.

This is the list of men's chief clothing faults:

Wearing belts instead of suspenders.

Choosing too light a gray color in felt hats.

Wearing double-breasted coats—if the man is especially short or heavy.

Combining with suits the wrong colors in shirts and ties.

Choosing the wrong proportion brim or crown in hats.

Marina Keeps Costume Jewel Fashion Alive

Duchess of Kent Favors Victorian and Early American Items

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

THE LOVELY LADY pictured on this page in her resplendent golden jewelry is not the only smart modern to borrow her costume jewelry from the past. She has an illustrious example in the person of H. R. H. the Duchess of Kent. The dazzling Marina has become so fascinated with Victorian and rare American specimens of jewelry that she is credited with keeping alive the public passion for costume jewels for at least another season.

MARSHALL ADAMS

Inasmuch as Molyneaux, Marina's favorite couturier, has burrowed deeply into our native jewel troves for inspiration, it is possible that more than one American girl may find some originals right in her own attic. If family relics of Civil War or early American days have gone unnoticed for years, drag these gems out into the open and have some Washington jeweler ingeniously bring the lines and setting of the jewelry up to date. But remember to retain some of the jewels' original charm of age.

For Australian Wear

Here are a few highlights of the costume jewels the Duchess of Kent is taking with her to Australia as accompaniment to the wondrous wardrobe she will reign in as First Lady of that continent. Foremost in her American Castlecliff-designed, but Molyneaux-sponsored, collection are baroque scroll necklaces and bracelets with a flourishing Edwardian feeling. There is a matching serpentine bracelet in gold and brilliants which twines around the arm and wrist upward for about 6 inches. This, incidentally, is a style new to this generation but old stuff to our grandmothers.

Another old-timer, revived by the duchess, is the dog collar, which is as flattering to her swan-like throat as it was years ago to Queen Alexandra, its patron saint. Marina's modernized Castlecliff dog collars are invariably inch-wide bands of black velvet with jeweled medallions fastened either at the front or sides. One, still rococo in influence, has a huge oval amethyst jewel set between two gold scrolls, dangling a fringe of golden chains and crystal teadrops. A more sophisticated dog collar has two almost life-sized jewel dahlias poised at the side of the black velvet band.

Budget Suggestion

An interesting revival from the past, which might be interpreted in crystal or colored glass for girls on budgets far less than Marina's, is the "pegged" stone necklace. This was the nineteenth century term for diamonds set in little cups of gold. A favorite Castlecliff necklace of the duchess is a flat "ribbon" of tiny pegged brilliants, which lie flat at the base of the throat and loop into a real ribbon formation at front, ending in a row of ruby stones. A final restoration from the past has come in the form of Marina's great 60-inch necklaces, worn looped twice about her throat, hanging almost to the waist and developed in the most ladylike of mediums, pale gold filigree and creamy baroque pearls.

Plan Your Fall Wedding

NO WONDER the modern bride looks serene. Questions of budgeting, dress, etiquette she settles well ahead of time, notes when items must be cared for.

By August the autumn bride and groom decide which they like and can afford—a formal or informal wedding. They keep in mind that the bride's the bigger expenses, of invitations, of church and reception, and the bride's trousseau. Among the bridegroom's expenses are the wedding ring, marriage license, clergyman's fee.

On the September list—invitations for a large wedding or announcements for a small one. Invitations should be ordered in time to mail them three weeks before the wedding day. Announcements should be mailed after the ceremony. And also the bride decides on menus, gets last fittings.

In October—the bridegroom orders boutonnieres for his ushers, the bride's bouquet. Rapidly the day draws near, but no last minute flurries when wedding etiquette is known. Gifts are acknowledged the day they arrive—and there's a clear understanding on such a point as who sits where at the church.

In our 40-page booklet, "How to Plan Your Wedding," are answers to dozens of questions on formal, informal weddings. Gives advice on each detail from the engagement to the "going away"—etiquette, budgeting, dress, menus.

Grand Gesture

Just as the waiter hands you the menus, the terrifying reminder strikes you. You did NOT put that extra $5 bill in your pocketbook!

Now that means that you have only—well, just how much have you? . . . You start to open your bag—stop as you see your guest staring at you.

"I'm really not very hungry—" she begins.

"Oh, but we're going to have a real lunch," you insist. "I'm simply starving."

(Was it $2 and something you had the last time you looked? Or was it only $1—and something?)

Your guest is studying the lower part of the menu card where the 65-cent sandwich luncheons are listed. You scan with a munificent air the $1 menus at the top of the card. "How would you like this filet mignon?" you ask, rummaging surreptitiously in your bag under the table cloth.

"It's a little heavy," she demurs.

"Well, how about this half of spring chicken—or this Long Island duckling?"

(Drat these bags without subdivisions, anyway! There! You've gotten hold of one $1 bill! Now if you can only find another——)

"Really those regular luncheons are so big" she protests.

"Oh, but we all really need to eat in hot weather—to keep up our strength," you hear yourself saying.

(Why on earth don't you tell her the truth? Borrow from her if necessary? Still she's only a friend of a friend from home—and leaving town tonight. And if you broke down now and told her, she'd probably order nothing but a ham sandwich. No, you'll wait.)

"I think I'll just order a la carte—a salad and something" she says.

"All right," you say heartily, noticing with a sickening feeling there are no salads under 65 cents. And just what does she mean by "something?"

(Of course, you could give a check. Still, it's a restaurant where they don't know you, and they'd have to call on the phone and it would all be so embarrassing . . .)

"This chicken salad would be nice," you say, boldly.

"All right," she says. You write down two chicken salads. (That's $1.40.)

"Don't you want some tomato juice—or a shrimp cocktail?" you ask hospitably.

"Orange juice," she says. You write two orange juices. That's 20 cents more—heavens, it might even be 30—oh, no, it couldn't.

"How about a sandwich of some kind—and a vegetable?" you inquire bravely.

"I don't believe so," she says, scanning the menu. "Of course they serve rolls with the salad." Heaven grant that they do, you pray inwardly.

(Maybe you have more change than you think. Now there were two quarters—maybe three in your change purse . . . and several dimes . . . and a lot of nickels and pennies.)

"These new green peas might be good," you suggest.

"What is egg plant au gratin?" she asks.

"Twenty cents—that is I—I mean it's made with cheese," you hurriedly explain.

"I really don't believe I need a vegetable," she says, looking at you suspiciously.

"Oh, yes, let's have this egg-plant au gratin," you say with determination, writing it down. "Now what to drink?"

"Ice tea," she says. You hand the order to the waiter. "We'll choose dessert later," you say grandly.

Through the lunch you force the food down as you hear yourself uttering empty rattling words.

A dollar, 40, plus 20 is $1.60, and then 40—that's $2 and then 30, that's $2.30, and then dessert—that'll be at least 15 cents apiece—that's $2.60 . . . and then the tip—wait, now is that right? A dollar forty plus 20 . . .)

You investigate your change purse with one hand under the table. Everything you feel is a penny. Wait now, is that a quarter—or a nickel? It's a nickel . . . . Now here's another dime. No, it's a penny.

You both order peach melba for dessert. It's 20 cents.

(Two-thirty and 40—that's $2.70, and then the tip. Oh, well, you'll just tell her the truth when the bill comes. Still—what if she should be short of change herself?)

The bill comes. You open your bag, begin rooting. Here's one $1 bill and, glory be—another! You open your change purse eagerly. Two quarters—that's $2.50. One dime . . . two dimes, that's $2.70. Enough for the bill! Now if there's only something for the tip. One nickel . . . two nickels . . . three nickels . . . four nickels . . . and one . . . two . . . three . . . four . . . five . . . six . . . seven pennies. Twenty-five cents and two cents over!

A warm sense of relief floods you. You lay the change on the tray and turn to your guest with a bright, friendly smile. She's really a very nice person after all.

Blueberry Pie With Ice Cream, Says Harry C. Butcher

(Favorite foods of Washington men are presented daily in this column.)

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

FOR A LONG time I have wondered what men eat at a "men only" golf club after they have been on a sun-baked fairway. At last, I have been able to tune in and learn what one enthusiastic golfer orders for lunch after he has teed off, driven and putted about the course at the Burning Tree Golf Club. Harry C. Butcher, vice president of Columbia Broadcasting System, in charge of the Washington office, knows infinitely more than how to direct the activities of a busy broadcasting system. He knows how to select a well balanced lunch for the summer time, and although he comes from the "Hawkeye" State of Iowa, yet he doesn't go in for "corn fed" diet.

Mr. Butcher

Let's tune in on Mr. Butcher at his club, where he has just finished a morning at golf. He is seated at a table, and Joe, the ever alert waiter, is standing by to take his order.

"Joe, I certainly have an edge on my appetite; do you have some nice cold cantaloupe?"

"Yes sir, Mr. Butcher. Honeydew or just plain cantaloupe?"

"Just so it's cold melon—no—make it cantaloupe. And Joe, I would like a hot chicken sandwich . . . Yes, white bread as usual, and don't forget I like butter on my bread. A vegetable salad, too."

"French dressing, sir?"

"Yes, that's right; and some iced coffee, with plenty of cream, and top it off with blueberry pie and ice cream."

So there you are. Mr. Butcher gives an object lesson in a well-chosen summer lunch, and career women, as well as men, would do well to take a leaf from Mr. Butcher's book.

And here is a recipe for the bluberry pie. The ice cream can be ordered from the neighborhood drugstore.

Blueberry Pie

Look over 3 cups of blueberries and wash. Line a 9-inch pie plate with plain pastry and brush with egg white; moisten the edges with cold water. Fill the plate with the berries, sprinkle with ⅔ cup sugar, 2 tablespoons flour and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Add ¼ teaspoon nutmeg and 1 tablespoon lemon juice and dot with butter. Roll out the top crust, gash, and place over the berries, pressing the edges firmly together. Bake at 425 degrees for 25 minutes and lower the temperature to 325 degrees and bake for 15 minutes.

A Woman's New York

Peplums, Jewelry Predominate in Fashion News

New York, Aug. 11.

IT IS ALWAYS fun—of a very mild type—to stay at home in our own back yard when the August style shows are raging in Paris, and study the reports sent home by our American sisters on the fresh French fashions for the ensuing fall and winter. As a wound-striped veteran of these exhibitions, I can truthfully say it is more fun than being on the spot itself.

ALICE HUGHES

Suppose we just devote ourselves to the newspaper reports of these cosmic matters. We are in our own homes, as comfortable as the weather permits, and we get the high spots of what the style racket calls Paris' "Grande Semaine," or, in our own luscious lingo, "the Hotsy-Totsy Week" of fashion. We are not pushed around by the "great dressmakers" of the French capital, who are not as great as they were two decades ago, from any point of view. But, relaxing in negligees, we get the straight dope without knocking ourselves out, and that is all to the good.

I have an item before me on the desk. "Hips in Style, Paris Winter Displays Show." The piece reads that "dresses and coats are hip-shirred, and there are velvet day suits designed with flared peplums." Dear old peplum! We read that "Coco" Chanel keynotes her collection with the dahlia; that "barbaric jewelry" is the highlight of that department, and is used to make collars for crepe day dresses and velvets for the evening.

Thrillingly enough, we learn that "much black is shown for day and evening." To which we reply, "When wasn't it?" Then we relax, overcome with the trivial news from the Roo de la Pooh, as the world flames with matters of life and death. Hazel, be a dear and bring me another jug of iced tea, with 20 pounds of ice. Fashion gossip twitters on, but if we are smart in August, we won't twitter with it—too much.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—As you may have heard, the Fair and things have sort of turned the damper down on the famous night life of our struggling village. But the fact is that at least one of the evening joy spots has been doing right well, and that is the one called the Diamond Horseshoe, operated by the same Wild Willie Rose whose Acquacade is the sensation of the Flushing Fandango. The Diamond Horsheshoe is the spirit of those gay nineties (I wonder if they were) and is geared for laughs. It furnishes them, and draws crowds, and little Mr. Rose is piling up money this summer in a fabulous way.

Anthony Duke Top Bachelor In New York

Since young Alfred Vanderbilt's marriage, the top boy bachelor in these parts has been Anthony Drexel Duke, a very good-looking youth. Now he has been tumbled from his perch by one of Cupid's deadly spears. Come September he will wed a cute little trick named Alice Rutgers, a name as famous in New Jersey as is Drexel in Philadelphia. So who is the next in line among the dashing bachelor youths?

Among recent visitors to the Fair have been Mr. and Mrs. Doug Corrigan, the newlyweds. Douglas, I noted, was wearing the leather wind-breaker which seems to be his trade-mark. He explained everything in the aviation exhibit to his new frau. Was she properly edified?

Again it is rumored here that our famous Ritz-Carlton Hotel will move up from its present Madison avenue site to the premises of the Pierre Hotel, at Sixtieth street and Fifth avenue. Nothing definite about it, but it would certainly wipe out a famous landmark in the frantic forties.

Pinkney Church Members Hope to Burn Mortgage

Pinkney Memorial Episcopal Church, St. Matthew's Parish, of Hyattsville, Md. Inset—The Rev. Arthur L. B. Ribble, rector

Vestry Leads Debt Liquidation Steps With Campaign to Sell 'Shares' in $3,750 Total at $50 for Each Unit

Parishioners of Pinkney Memorial Episcopal Church, St. Matthew's Parish, of Hyattsville, are hoping by Easter to realize a long-cherished ambition—watching the church mortgage go up in smoke.

Toward that end, a plan was launched some time ago under the leadership of the vestry for the liquidation of the $3,750 debt through the sale of 75 "shares" at $50 each. Forty-eight "shares" have been subscribed to date by individuals, families and organizations, and about $2,000 in cash has been paid.

Among Prince Georges County's oldest and most vigorous congregations, Pinkney Memorial Church has been experiencing a phenomenal growth in recent years, especially since the arrival of the youthful and energetic present spiritual leader, the Rev. Arthur L. B. Ribble, in October, 1937. Accomplishments have draw special commendation from the Very Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in America, and the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Tucker's Praise

"It is most gratifying to learn of the progress made at St. Matthew's Parish during the past year," wrote Bishop Tucker some months ago, adding that "such a record sets an example for all of us, showing that as we plant and water with diligence and devotion, we may depend upon it that God will continue to give the increase. I congratulate you and wish you even greater success in the coming year."

"It was with deep satisfaction that I observed on my recent visit to your parish the growing interest of its people," commented Bishop Freeman.

Visitors Note Efficiency

"I realize more than ever the value of the work in our rural parishes and I have great joy and profit in visiting them. The most vital thing in parish life is the loyalty of the people. I believe your rector is doing an excellent piece of work, and I am happy to believe that he is being supported in every way by the vestry and the people generally."

Visitors to Pinkney Memorial Church connot fail to be impressed by the marked efficiency of the rector and his coworkers in carrying out the manifold duties of the parish, whose organization dates to 1811. The late Dr. William Pinkney, at one time Bishop of Maryland, once served as rector.

The Rev. Mr. Ribble said yesterday that one of the most effective means of contacting members and prospective members has been through the "Visitor," a weekly parish publication with a circulation of 335, distributed to homes regularly by 20 carrier boys from the church.

All Activities Covered

A four-page mimeographed and illustrated publication, the "Visitor" gives complete coverage of all parish activities, and carries four additional pages when the financial report of the parish treasury is issued. The editorial page gives the rector —who modestly admits being editor —an opportunity to preach to additional scores.

Another publicity feature is the annual year-book, containing some 40 pages, and describing the various activities of the parish, as well as other informative material. Assisting the Rev. Mr. Ribble in editing the "Visitor" are Miss Hilda Lanhardt, managing editor; Miss Pauline Wilson, assistant editor, and Edward Lanhardt, jr., circulation manager.

Co-operating with their rector, the carriers make a report each Sunday of parishioners who have moved. In addition, a special committee of young people stand in the rear of the church each Sunday and record the names of all attending services. This enables the rector to keep in close touch with his flock.

The Church School, one of the most active in the Washington area, has many unique features, among them the use of a course of study on the Book of Common Prayer, prepared by Francis W. Glaze, one of its teachers. While not complete as yet, the course has been utilized by the boys' class, of which Glaze is teacher, and shortly will be used by members of the girls' class.

Beginning with the kindergarten group, the church school has a curriculum gauged to fit the age-needs of all members, and for its adult classmen, there is a special course in the practical application of Christianity. The school has two choirs—the boys, under Charlotte Lanhardt, and the girls, supervised by Miss C. Jones and Mrs. D. Ainsworth.

To create more interest in church school work, pins and certificates are awarded for perfect attendance on the second Sunday of each month, and the class having the highest percentage of attendance for the pervious month is awarded a banner, which it retains until the next award is presented.

The school during 1938 paid for one full share of tthe mortgage debt. The superintendent is Elgin M. Noack; assistants are Frederick Glasgow and Robert Hurley; secretary-treasurer, Clark Naylor; music directors, Charlotte Lanhardt and William Moore, and pianist, Jane Owings. Average attendance is 137.

Elgin M. Noack is senior warden; John H. Burton, junior warden, and G. Lanhardt, register. The vestry consists of G. Podges Carr, chairman; Harry A. Boswell, Stanleigh E. Jenkins, Harry R. Hall, Charles G. Lanhardt, Nicholas Orem, Noble L. Owings and S. Marvin Peach.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, junior chapter, most recently organized group, February 22 participated in the corporate communion service for men and boys at Washington Cathedral. Bishop Freeman, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Ribble, conducted an admission service for the chapter, and Mr. Glaze presented the candidates at the altar. Glaze is lay reader of the church.

Other organizations and their leaders include St. Matthew's Guild, Mrs. Thomas Huddleston, president; Women's Auxiliary, Mrs. Elgin Noack, president; Daughters of the King, Mary and Martha Chapter, Mrs. Cora E. Morris, president; the Young Peopole's Fellowship, Pauline Wilson, president; the Altar Guild, Mrs. William F. Noack, directress.

One of Pinkney Memorial Church's most colorful personalities is R. R. Stratton, choir director, who once played under the illustrious Sousa. He was leader of the Third Marine Band. Other choir leaders are Noble L. Owings, organist; Mrs. C. F. Orton, choir mother, and Miss Helen Schloer, assistant. Mrs. William F. Noack leads the Altar Guild. John H. Naylor is pencemaster.

Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS

"TE DEUM"

"Holy God we praise Thy name!
Lord of all we bow before Thee!
All on earth Thy sceptre claim,
All in Heav'n above adore Thee!
Infinite Thy vast domain,
Everlasting is Thy reign."

"Te Deum," or "Holy God We Praise Thy Name," a great hymn of the church, breathing praise and adoration to Almighty God, was spontaneously composed and sung alternately by Saint Ambrose and Saint Augustine on the night of Easter eve, 387, A. D., at the baptism of Saint Augustine.

Alexandria Bridal Law In Effect

5 of 6 Couples Receive Permits Without Presenting Health Certificates

Alexandria's controversial health-marriage ordinance went into effect as scheduled yesterday, but five of the six couples who received marriage licenses from Corporation Clerk Elliott F. Hoffman failed to present health certificates, as required by the new law. Despite a statement by city officials that the law would be rigidly enforced, no attempt was made to prosecute any of the violators.

Hoffman made clear his position in a brief statement, in which he said he has not received any request from the city health officer to inform applicants for marriage of the terms of the ordinance. The measure provides that the health officer shall request Hoffman, as well as all ministers and others licensed to perform marriage ceremonies within the city, to inform all applicants that a health certificate is required.

Despite the fact that Hoffman has not yet been requested to ask applicants to present health certificates, the ordinance is in force and violators are subject to the penalties provided, according to City Attorney Armistead Boothe. Even if applicants are unaware of the terms of the ordinance, they will be guilty of a misdemeanor, as is provided in the measure, he said.

In the event the city finds its necessary, Boothe added, an officer will be stationed at the license bureau to inform applicants of the requirements of the new law.

George W. Putnam, of Americus, Ga., and Joan Lee, of this city, both colored, were the first to apply for a marriage license under the new law, appearing at the bureau a few minutes after noon. They were granted their license without delay.

Of the six couples applying, Kenneth L. Forrest, of Norfolk, Va., and Hazel S. Moore, Maddock, N. Dak., were the only ones to present a health certificate. They were unaware of the local ordinance, but had originally planned to be married in New York State, which requires a health certificate from all applicants, they said.

Lieut. Comdr. Topper to Leave

Lieut. Comdr. J. L. Topper, officer in charge of the Naval torpedo station here for the past two years, will vacate his post September 15, when he will leave to assume his newly assigned duty as flag secretary of the Atlantic Squadron. He will be stationed aboard the flagship of the fleet, under Admiral Hayne Ellis.

Succeeding Topper at the torpedo station here will be Commander R. W. Hayler, who reported here this week to assume his duties as officer in charge. The position of assistant to the officer in charge has also been created, and will be filled by Lieut. Comdr. Paul Wirtz, who reported yesterday.

Topper has been on duty here since May of 1937, and has supervised most of the work under which the plant is being re-equipped for full-time operation, expected shortly after the first of next year. His successor comes here from a 3-year period of sea duty, during which time he served as commander of Destroyer Division No. 28, of the United States Battle Fleet.

Most of the work of restoring the Torpedo Plant building has been completed, and new equipment is now being installed to replace the obsolete machinery in the original plant. Approximately 80 permanent employes, mostly specialized workers, are engaged, while a force of over 100 PWA laborers is at work on the building itself.

The Alarming Firemen

Alexandria police headquarters was flooded with telephone inquiries yesterday afternoon, when four fire companies sounded sirens and bells for approximately 15 minutes following receipt of word that Alexandria firemen had won two major prizes at the State Firemen's Convention, which closed last night at Cape Charles, Va. Some 200 calls were placed by alarmed residents.

The Alexandria delegation to the convention won first place in the "open to the world competition" during the annual parade yesterday, and received first prize in competition for member companies of the Virginia State Firemen's Association. Members of the department who were unable to attend the session are planning to stage a reception for the delegates, when they arrive home this morning at 7 o'clock aboard the Norfolk & Washington steamer.

Delegates to Attend Fair

A two-day tour of the New York World's Fair is being arranged for local delegates to the annual convention of the American Leper Mission, to be held in New York City the latter part of October. Approximately 15 local members are expected to attend the two-day session.

The Alexandria branch, under the direction of Mrs. William M. Reardon, president, is now preparing an exhibit of articles and supplies to be sent to the national convention, and contributions are being received daily.

Alexandria Firemen Win 2 Top Prizes

Largest and Best Appearing Company At Convention

Cape Charles, Va., Aug. 11 (AP).—Alexandria captured two prizes in a parade which brought to a close today the fifty-third annual convention of the Virginia State Firemen's Association.

A $200 award for the largest and best appearing company with a band in the line of march and a $50 prize for the same qualifications in the open class went to the Alexandrians.

Covington won a $100 prize for the largest and best appearing company without a band and $25 in a similar open-class event.

Other winners included Luray, $25, best appearing company from a town of less than 500 population; Fredericksburg, $25, for the best appearing company from towns of between 5,000 and 10,000; Staunton, $25, for cities over 10,000.

Gordonsville, $25, best apparatus; Luray, $25, best drum and bugle corps; South Norfolk, $100, best ladies' auxiliary, and Harrisonburg, second prize of $50 in this class.

Norfolk took first place in a band contest, with Alexandria second.

The parade, headed by State and local police, extended about 2 miles through the streets of Cape Charles. Twenty-four companies participated, including units from Wythe District, Elizabeth City County, Exmore, Cradock, Luray, Heathville, Covington, Alexandria, Gordonsville, Clifton Forge, Harrisonburg Newport News, Parksley, Tasley, Winchester, Culpeper, South Norfolk, Phoebus, Pulaski, West Point, Fredericksburg, Staunton, Onancock and Berlin, Md.

Several thousand persons attending the convention, which has been meeting since Monday, heard Senator Harry F. Byrd assert in an address yesterday that he believed tolerance and human understanding was the basis for a solution to the Nation's problems and that the Government could not spend its way to prosperity.

The people of Virginia, Senator Byrd said, were a particular inspiration for good government by reason of the State's contribution to the national Government.

The convention crowds witnessed contests yesterday that included reel races, rowing and capsize races and band competition.

Lower Phone Rates Sought At Poolesville

The Electric Light and Improvement Association, civic group of Purcellville, Md., will campaign for reduced telephone rates, it was announced yesterday.

The group will meet within a few days to prepare a request to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for lower tolls, Mayor Robert Gray said.

If this is not successful, he declared, the association would file a petition with the Maryland Public Service Commission.

Mayor Gray said the association will ask a 10-cent rate to Rockville and a 5-cent rate to Gaithersburg. The present toll charges are 15 cents for calls to both Rockville and Gaithersburg. A reduction also will be asked in the 20-cent charge from Poolesville to Frederick. Mayor Gray pointed out that residents of Dickerson, 5 miles from Poolesville, pay only 5 cents for calls to Frederick.

The association will not ask for a cut in the basic monthly service charge, Mayor Gray said.

Organized several years ago, the association succeeded in obtaining a reduction in the power rates charged by the Potomac Edison Co., of Hagerstown.

Md. Convicts Two More in Gaming War

Found Guilty at Upper Marlboro on Slot-Machine Count; 15 'Bookies' Quit

Prince Georges County's gambling cleanup campaign moved forward yesterday as two men were convicted at Upper Marlboro of operating slot machines and police reported that 15 "numbers" and "bookie" establishments had closed up.

A. R. Young, 28, of Cottage City, Md., and Andy Bowen, 41, of 14 Fourth street northeast, were found guilty of setting up and maintaining gaming tables by Police Judge Alan Bowie.

The case was tried before Judge Bowie on a charge of venue from Judge Walter Green's court, where two other men were convicted of similiar charges Wednesday. State Senator Charles C. Marbury, counsel for all four men, gave notice of appeal.

Young and Bowen were arrested by County Officers Richard Earnshaw and Francis Richards in a raid on Mike Young's place on the Marlboro pike. Four slot machines were confiscated.

Meanwhile, Corpl. John F. Dent, of the special vice squad assigned to "harrass" all known gaming houses in the county, revealed that 15 of the establishments had closed down since Monday.

"The public is coming to our support," he said, "and furnishing us with lots of leads. So far, we've only had to warn proprietors of 'bookie' and 'numbers' places and they have cleared out. But, if necessary, we'll take more drastic measures. Our main purpose is to run them out of the county. We don't care how we do it."

"Last Tuesday we went to Jimmy's place to see if it was really closed. There was only one employe around and he voluntarily let us in. There wasn't a sign of any gaming equipment."

The "harrassment campaign" against Jimmy's place opened the current antigambling drive. Police stationed themselves at the entrance to the establishment jotting down tag numbers of persons entering the grounds. Patronage dwindled to the vanishing point as the spectacle of uniformed policemen frightened off would-be customers. Finally, last Saturday, the place was closed.

Prince Georges Firemen to Hold Meeting Today

A parade, fire-fighting contest and demonstrations will highlight the annual convention of the Prince Georges County Volunteer Firemen's Association and Ladies' Auxiliary at Upper Marlboro, Md., today.

Firemen and rescue squad members from 21 Prince Georges companies will participate in the program. Representatives of several companies from neighboring southern Maryland counties also will attend.

The parade is scheduled for 2 p. m., followed by contests and demonstrations. Prizes will be awarded for the best parade entries and contest winners.

The Ladies' Auxiliary will hold memorial services at 11 a. m. Similar services will be conducted by the firemen at 7 p. m.

$4,000 Barn Blaze Blocks Lee Blvd.

A spectacular fire blocked traffic for a quarter of a mile on Lee highway last night as the Cherrydale, Va., Fire Department vainly battled to save the large barn of George A. Leissler, of 3101 Lee highway.

The barn, containing a large quantity of valuable antique furniture, was destroyed with loss estimated between $4,000 and $5,000. Assisted by the Halls Hill department, the Cherrydale fire fighters stretched 200 yards of hose from the road to the barn and kept flames from other buildings.

Shorey, Walper Under Deadline In $10,000 Play; W. Va. Pro Has Ace

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 1 (AP).—The visiting firemen, who couldn't hold a candle to par in the first round, tore that old gentleman limb from limb today as Crowd-Pleaser Gene Sarazen blazed his way to a two-stroke lead in the $10,000 Dapper Dan Open Golf Tournament.

A gallery of nearly 2,000 cheered the "Connecticut Yankee" as he burned up the course with a 66, four under par and two strokes better than the course record set two years ago by Ray Mangrum, of Pittsburgh.

Hardly was Sarazen out of the locker room when Vic Ghezzi, husky pro from Deal, N. J., ambled up to the eighteenth green, missed a 15-foot putt and still matched the East Brookfield farmer's 66. His 81 yesterday gave him 147.

Shute Close Behind

And a few minutes later Denny Shute, of Huntington, W. Va., stearked his way around the Wildwood Country Club course in 68 for a two-day total of 139 and second place. Close behind was Johnny Bulla, Chicago, with 142. The bulky Bulla cut one stroke from par 4 from his round yesterday.

Bracketed at 143 in the chase for $2,500 first money were Byron Nelson, National Open champion from Reading, Pa., and Ralph Guldahl, the comeback kid from Madison, N. J., a transplanted Texan. Guldahl added a 71 to yesterday's 72. Nelson also banged out a 71 after taking a 6 on the par 4 sixteenth.

Close behind at 144 were Clayton Heafner, the "Candy Kid" from Charlotte, N. C.; Lloyd Mangrum, Los Angeles; Johnny Revolta, Evanston, Ill., and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Winchester, Mass. Heafner pulled out an even par 70 today. Mangrum 71 and Revolta and McSpaden 72s.

157 Qualifying Limit

Jimmy Thomson, Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., put together a 73 for 145 and Clarence Doser, Philadelphia, got the same total with a second-round 71. Ed Dudley, Philadelphia, had putter trouble and added 2 strokes to yesterday's 72 for 146, the same as Ed Oliver, Hornell, N. Y., who shot 71 today.

His woods under perfect control and working like a well-oiled machine, the aging Sarazen led a field of 64 pros with scores of 157 or better into the two final rounds of 18 holes each. Eleven amateurs with 161 or better qualified.

Though he wasn't among the leaders, Chuck Onoretta, of Wheeling, W. Va., turned in the fanciest one-hole score of the day, a 227-yard hole-in-one on the sixth. He turned the trick with a No. 4 wood, the ball landing on the apron of the green and rolling gently in.

Shorey, Walker In

Two Washington, D. C., professionals will be in the running for the top prize tomorrow, the third having stroked himself out of the final 36 holes with a pair of 79s. He was Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam's lanky representative.

Mel Shorey and Leo Walper were the lucky pair, the first achieving the coveted round with a spectacular 73 after a disastrous first-day 82. His total was 155, two under the deadline, as was Walper's. The latter pared his first-round 79 to a 76 today for the successful qualifying score.

DeChard, D. C. Boxer, Kayoes Brady in 2d

Frederick, Md., Aug. 11.—Fighting one of the best bouts of his career, Jim DeChard, amateur heavyweight boxing champion of Washington, knocked out Johnny Brady, of New York, here in the second round of a scheduled five-rounder. Brady, a protege of Benny Leonard, was seconded by the former lightweight champion. DeChord floored Brady for a count of seven in the first round and drove a right to his jaw in the second heat to finish the bout. Two of the four boys brought here from New York by Leonard were beaten.

He fell 20 feet to the deck near the end of the race.

Krakauskas to Hurl First Game in Boston; Bloodworth at Second

By Shirley Povich.

En Route to Boston, Aug. 11.—In their new role of American League nuisances to first division clubs, the Nats are bound now for Fenway Park where tomorrow they hope to start making trouble for the oBston Red Sox.

For most of the week the Nats have been a boon to the Red Sox by their procedure in slapping down the Yankees in two out of three games, but tomorrow they will be gunning for oBston in the start of a three-game series.

Two weeks ago the Nats would have appeared to be a soft touch for Joe Cronin's pennant-ambitious club, but it's a different picture now. Because the Nats are a different ball team, quite the hottest ball club in the league as 11 victories of their last 13 games attest.

Plan for Trouble

They haven't won a ball game in Boston in five tries this season, the Nats haven't, but they are heading back to Fenway Park this time with new power, new fire, and magically improved pitching. There's Jimmy Bloodworth and Mickey Vernon, for instance, two young men who have blossomed as potent packages since the Red Sox last laid eyes on the Nats.

This Washington club is destined for no lofty place in the standings this season, it's fairly obvious, but of late the Nats have developed a vast capacity for making trouble. And in Boston they will be in a trouble-making mood because thus far in ten games this season they-ve been licked nine times by Cronin's club.

The Nats left Washington tonight with the blessings of Owner Clark Griffith who declared nothing would please him better than to see his club take three straight from his son-in-law's Boston team. "Joe Cronin will have to catch the Yankees by himself," said Griffith. "We won't be trying to help him. We won't be pulling any punches at Boston."

Krakky to Start

Manager Bucky Harris has Joe Krakauskas readied for a pitching effort in tomorrow's opening game. "Away from the heat in Washington, Joe should go well," said Harris. "It was the hot weather that wore him down in his last two starts."

Harris' pitching program is plainly obvious. It must be Krakauskas

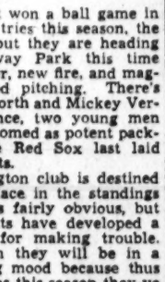
DeShong Moved To Newark After Rest With Yanks

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—The Yankees today released James Brooklyn De Shong, right-handed pitcher, to their Newark farm in the International League under option.



DESHONG

He will join the Bears in Montreal on Sunday.

The Yankees obtained De Shong from the Washington Senators on waivers. He joined them on June 21, but never made an appearance in the game and hasn't pitched since June 10. He reported to the Yankees with a record of three defeats and no victories.

The three lads (above) who figured strongest in Johnson-Powell Playground's successful defense of its senior softball championship yesterday on the Lincoln Memorial grounds, gloat over their luck. They are (left to right) Burton Sperling, the hurler who trounced Virginia Avenue, 6-5, in the finals; Paul Fuoco, who scored the winning run, and Joe Corrado, who drove in the winning run. Powell Wins Playground Softball Title

By Bill Burnett

Despite the absence of its coach, Phil Fox, Johnson-Powell won its second consecutive city-wide senior playground softball championship yesterday on the Memorial Field, beating out Virginia Avenue in a nine-inning duel, 6 to 5. In the junior finals, Stoddert was forced to over come a three-run lead taken by Van Buren in the first inning, but it finally triumphed in regulation time, 7 to 4.

In losing the title defenders, Virginia Avenue put up one of the gamest scraps in the four-day tournament. Trailing, 5 to 0, going into its half of the fifth, the Avenue boys staged a rally that pared the deficit to 5 to 2, and in their next time at bat managed to tie the score at 5 to 5.

For two innings the score remained deadlocked. In the ninth, however, Paul Fuoco, Powell left-fielder, got on and around to second on a scratchy hit to leftfield. He stayed there while King grounded out, but romped home immediately after on the clean single by Joe Corrado. Burton Sperling's six-hit pitching was credited with the victory, the performance shading eight-hit work by Virginia Avenue's Stuart.

Besides pitching a seven-hit game for Stoddert, Frank Bolac was the star in almost every other department as well. He had two singles in there times up, made six assists and started a double play.

Joe Judge, former Washington Senator first baseman, doubled up in the "throwing out the first ball" ceremony. He started both games.

Aussies Beat Cubans In Davis Cup Play

By the Associated Press

Sea Bright, N. J., Aug. 11.—Australia today advanced one step nearer its goal—a meeting with America in the Davis Cup challenge round—by clinching victory in the American zone finals against Cuba.

Taking up where they left off in the singles yesterday, John Bromwich and Adrian Quist paired together to register a smashing straight-set victory in the decisive doubles match over the Cuban team of Ricardo Morales and Lorenzo Nodarse, 6—1, 6—0 and 6—3.

Two singles matches remain in the series but they will have no bearing on the outcome. The Aussies already have won the required three out of five. The remaining singles, to be played tomorow, pair Quist against Jose Aguero and Bromwich against Morales.

The Cubans were away to an auspicious start today as they took the first game, but thereafter they never had a chance, although they did succeed in carying five games in the first set to deuce.

With Quist's superb playing offsetting some of Bromwich's lapses, the Australians, after dropping that first game, won 12 straight games before the Cubans broke through with a love victory on Morales' service. Incidentally, three of the Cubans' four victories were love games on Morales' service.

Only in the third set, when Bromwich and Quist apparently eased up, did the Cubans make it fairly close. In that set they registered 25 points for 28 for the Australians. The point score in the second set was 29 to 14 and in the first set 34 to 22.

After tomorrow's matches the Australian team will head for Brookline, Mass., where August 24-26 it will meet Yugoslavia in the interzone finals.

Alice Marble to Meet Mrs. Fabyan in Final Of Women's Play; Kay Stammers Beaten

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 11.—Frankie Parker, who has yet to make an unnecessary move on a tennis court, reached the finals of the Eastern grass court championships today by teaching young tempestuous Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, a valuable net lesson.

He let Van Horn slug and smash his way to a first set victory and a 4-1 lead in the second set, before proving that pace is as important in tennis as power.

Wears Himself Out

Cautiously Parker, second seeded in this tourney, got his racquet on everything that the reckless Van Horn could slam across after that to win his semifinal match 3—6, 8—6, 6—1, 6—4. At the end the veteran was much less tired than Van Horn, whose punch thrilled a gallery of 2,000—until he wore himself out.

Alice Marble, the American and Wimbledon champion, and dark-haired Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan came through to the women's finals with performances that dealt misery to their opponents.

Blond Alice had to call on her favorite shots to stop a serious challenge engineered by Mme. Rene Mathieu, of France. The scores were 6—3, 7—5. Mrs. Fabyan, however, won the plaudits of the gallery with a sensational series of strokes that submerged England's best—Kay Stammers—6—1, 6—2.

Hunt, Sutter Lose

Most notable achievement in the men's doubles play came when Bobby Riggs and Elwood Cooke, his Portland teammate, outlasted Gil Hunt, of Washington, and Ernie Sutter, of New Orleans, 18—16, 2—6, 6—2.

The surprise women's doubles team of Dorothy Bundy, possessor of a famous tennis name, and Mary Arnold stopped Helen Jacobs and Dorothy Workman, 7—5, 6—2, in a semifinals match for the day's most sensational reversal of form. Miss Marble and Mrs. Fabyan won the other semifinal, downing Dorothy Andrus, Stamford, Conn., and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, 6—1, 8—6.

Saturday's schedule calls for the women's doubles final, the men's singles semifinal between Bobby Riggs and Ladislav Hecht, which was put off from today, and the men's doubles semifinals.

Two Outsiders Gain Finals of Women's Open

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 11.—Two feminine golfers who have never won a major title advanced today to the finals of the thirty-ninth annual closed Western Women's Golf Championship at Oakland Hills Country Club. They are Ella Mae Williams, 22-year-old Chicagoan, who holds the Chicago District and Illinois State titles, and 18-year-old Edith Esterbrooks, of Dubuque, Iowa, holder of the Iowa title and runner-up to Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, in the 1938 Western.

Miss Williams advanced by upsetting Elizabeth Hicks, 18-year-old Long Beach (Calif.) school girl, 3 and 1. Miss Williams played steady golf while her foe, holder of the Southern California title, had her worst round of the tournament, three putting frequently and landing many shots in the Yawning traps. Miss Estabrook bounced up and down to win from Mrs. Russell Mann, of Chicago, 1-up by dropping a 20-foot putt for a birdie 4 on the final green.

Miss Estabrook won four of the first six holes to be 4-up. Then she lost six of the next seven holes and five holes in a row to become 2 down with four holes left to play.

Del Baker, Tigers' Manager Signed for Another Year

Walter O. Briggs Says Pilot Will Have Free Hand

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 11. — Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Detroit Tigers, announced today that Manager Del Baker had been signed for another season.

Briggs said:

"I am glad to announce that Del Baker, in whose managerial ability we have the utmost confidence, will again lead the Tigers in 1940. I think he has done as well as could be expected during the present year. He will have the same free hand in directing the club. His only instructions are to spare no effort that will give this great baseball town a team of championship caliber."

Vitt Also Signs

Cleveland, Aug. 11 (AP).—Oscar Vitt, the Cleveland Indians' manager for the past two seasons, was signed tonight to pilot the Tribe again in 1940.

At least half of the marlin being caught at Ocean City in the greatest run in the history, are being tagged with ivory labels run through the pectoral fin, and tossed back into the water . . . it's an attempt on the part of the Bureau of Fisheries to learn the habits and habitats of the fish, concerning which little is known . . . if recaught, the marlin is tagged again and the Fisheries Bureau as well as the original catcher is notified . . . marlin are poor eating . . . Clark Griffith, who is not in baseball's hall of fame, was a far greater big league star than Connie Mack, who is . . . any club in the league could have had Pete Appleton at the $7,500 waiver price earlier in the summer . . . Lou Zontini, best of Notre Dame's backs last season, saw all of the Nats' eight-game winning streak while vacationing in Washington . . . explaining his 84-yard touchdown run against Minnesota last season, Zontini said: "It was quick-opening play through tackle and when they didn't lay a hand on me nobody was more surprised than me. It was one of those perfect plays you read about."

Maynard Daniels and his two-fisted punching are heaven-sent as far as Promoters Turner and Ahearn are concerned . . . they could toss him in against either Nathan Mann or Steve Dudas and reap the season's biggest gate . . . Kayak II, the Howard colt which has been a standout in the California stakes, has already been entered in the Pimlico Special . . . which may present Johnstown, Challedon and Kayak II as a three-horse field . . . Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Tigers, has shouted a flat "no" to the proposal that the St. Louis Cardinals move into Detroit and make it a two-team town . . . Claude Passeau, of the Cubs, is the only pitcher in the big leagues who is permitted to rub the ball in his glove . . . exception is made in his case because of a boyhood accident which left two fingers of his hand permanently flexed.

Greenhalgh Stable Wins at Hot Springs

4-Year-Old Sally Port Takes Hunter Title Of Bath County Show, and Billy Do Gets Reserve Jumper Honors Behind Santa Claus

By Anne Hagner

Hot Springs, Va., Aug. 11.—Sally Port, smooth performing 4-year-old owned by Mr. and Mrs. George P Greenhalgh's Springbury Stable, of Berryville, Va., won the hunter championship of the Bath County Horse Show, which closed here today. The personable young daughter of War Hero—imported Port Rush jumped beautifully during both days of the show with the exception of one bad mistake in the Hunter Stake class, when she stumbled at a stiff stone wall on the outside course and knocked her rider, Billie Wetherill, unconscious for a few moments. Neither was hurt, however, and the brown mare came back to win a second in the Corinthian and a blue in the hunt teams to outscore a number of more experienced hunters.

Another Greenhalgh entry, Billy Do, got the judges' nod frequently in both hunter and open jumping classes and won the reserve jumper championship to Mr. and Mrs. William Haggin Perry's big Santa Claus.

A large number of excited spectators at this well known spa will no doubt need several extra doses of "the cure" of sulphur water after the nerve-wracking knock-down-and-out class, in which Billy Do, with Shirley Payne up, and Santa Claus, ridden by Mrs. Perry, had repeated jump-offs and sent the fences to 5 feet, 9 inches. Billy Do was the ultimate victor as the audience rocked the grandstands with applause.

3-Year-Old Champ

Entries from northern Virginia, all well known to District show followers, practically dominated the hunter and jumper events as Christopher Greear, jr's., bay, Highland Ace, took the 3-year-old championship home to Upperville, Va., defeating Meadow Lane Farm's Shanghai, of Hot Springs.

In addition, Truman Dodson's good stable of hunters picked up several blues and minor awards to keep his Charlottesville Stable well in the running.

Most notable victory of the day came in the class for hunt teams, when the Greenhalgh's Billy Do, Sally Port and a half sister to Sally Port, a 3-year-old named Sly Portia, turned in perfect performances to defeat Dodson and Howard Haffner's flashy team of Chestnuts representing the Farmington Hunt. Horsemen were surprised at the excellent accounting of Sly Portia over the solid 4-foot fences, for, being a 3-year-old, she has not had to jump over 3 feet 6 inches all season. Under expert guidance of Shirley Payne, the youngster went as well as her veteran stablemate, Billy Do, with Mrs. Wetherill up, and Sally Port, ridden by Sue Bolling.

Yankees Score Six Runs in Fifth to Rout Athletics, 9 to 5

Hayes Hits Ninth Homer Of Season

Champs Trail, 1-0, Till They Hit Stride; Two Errors Help New York Triumph

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—The world champion Yankees, getting back in their old habit of one big inning, scored six times in the fifth frame today to plaster the Philadelphia Athletics, 9 to 5.

Trailing, 1 to 0, at the time, the Yanks batted around with two errors and a wild pitch supplementing their six hits. Joe Gordon started it with a walk. Buddy Rosar and Babe Dahlgren singled for one run with Dahlgren going to second on Eric Tipton's fumble. Lefty Gomez fanned. Frank Crosetti singled two runs across, stole second and went to third on Frank Hayes' bad throw. Then Red Rolfe struck out. Charley Keller scored Crosetti with a single. Joe DiMaggio scored on a wild pitch before Gordon fanned on his second trip to the plate.

The Yanks added single runs in the last three innings to round out their margin.

Hayes kept the A's within threatening distance by hitting his ninth homer with two on in the seventh inning, reducing New York's margin to 7 to 5. Manager Joe McCarthy took cognizance of the gesture by removing Gomez for a pinchhitter, one of the few times he ever has lifted a pitcher while leading. Nevertheless, Gomez got credit for his ninth victory.

Bill Nagel was expelled in the ninth for protesting a decision at second base and Outfielder Bob Johnson finished the game at second for the A's.

D. C. Printers Beat N.Y., 9-3, In Ball Tourney

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 11.—Phil Boundford hurled ten-hit ball as Washington handed New York its first defeat, 9-3, in the twenty-ninth annual Union Printers International Baseball Tournament at Oriole Park today to throw the leaders into a triple tie for first place.

The twice-straight championship Washington nine clearly showed its superiority over the highly touted New Yorkers, and hammered two Gotham hurlers for 17 hits, including two doubles and a triple. In addition to their hitting the victors pilfered five bases.

Lead Victors' Attack

Rip Sole, Jimmy Halloran and Skip Gartland led the victors on the attack. Each blasted out three hits with Sole hitting safely three times in as many times at bat. Halloran and Gartland both knocked two singles and a double. Gartland also drove in four markers.

The Washington team clinched the contest early in the game, scoring in the opening frame, twice in the second and adding another counter in the third. A three-run spree in the fourth inning and a brace of runs in the eighth completed the scoring.

Tomasulo, New York centerfielder, was the heavy hitter for the losers. He pounded out three singles in four times at bat.

Excellent Control

The hurlers had excellent control and only four walks were issued by the trio. Sagat, starting hurler for New York, issued two free trips and fanned none. His successor, Cooney walked one and whiffed one batter. Boundford allowed only one walk while fanning three, in addition only one base was stolen on him.

As a result of today's games there will be two games tomorrow, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon.

Bill Lee Beats Pittsburgh For Cubs, 3-2

Veteran Effective Although Given Only 2 Days' Rest

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Pitching with only two days rest, big Bill Lee hurled the Chicago Cubs to a 3-2 victory today, yielding only six hits to the Pittsburgh Pirates in their series opener.

He was effective all the way in registering his fourteenth victory, despite the fact he pitched the Cubs to a triumph over Cincinnati in the first game of a double-header Tuesday.

His mates found it easy to get on base against pitchers Max Butcher and Truett Sewell, but the Cubs had an exceedingly hard time reaching home plate, an even dozen Cub runners being stranded on the bases.

Chicago took a one-run lead in the third inning on singles by Stan Hack, Billy Herman and Augie Galan. The Pirates went ahead in the fifth after Pep Young had walked. Young moved up on Lee's wild throw on Ray Mueller's sacrifice and a force play and scored on a passed ball by Manager Gabby Hartnett. The second run in the same inning was scored by Lloyd Waner, who romped home on Brother Paul's double, one of his three hits.

The Cubs tied the score in their half of the fifth, hits by Herman, Galan and Hank Leiber filling the bases. Herman scored on Rookie Bill Nicholson's sacrifice fly.

The Cubs' other scintillating rookie, Shortstop Bobby Mattick, drove home the winning run in the seventh, when he doubled off Sewell, sending Nicholson across the plate.

Buck Newsom Pitches, Hits Tigers to Victory Over Browns

Big Pitcher Celebrates Thirty-first Birthday By Driving in Winning Run in Ninth

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 11.—Buck Newsom pitched the Detroit Tigers to a 4-to-3 victory over the St. Louis Browns today and drove in the winning run with a ninth inning single.

It was Newsom's thirty-first birthday and he went into the game determined to win his thirteenth victory of the season after failing the last two times he started. Newsom fanned 11.

Young Bob Harris, St. Louis pitcher, gave Newsom a stiff battle all the way. He had one bad inning, the fourth, in which the Tigers bunched four hits for three runs.

In the ninth, with one away, George Tebbetts and Frank Croucher were safe on scratch hits and Newsom poked a hit into left field, scoring Tebbetts with the winning run.

Higbe Allows 2 Hits as Phils Beat Giants, 2-1

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 11.—Two-hit pitching by Walter Higbe brought the lowly Phillies their first victory over the New York Giants since May 12 by a 2-to-1 count today.

The only run scored against the young righthander whom Philadelphia acquired from the Chicago Cubs came without a hit in the seventh inning. Harry Danning and Zeke Bonura walked, Tom Hafey sacrificed and Danning scored on an infield out.

Roy Hughes, the former St. Louis Browns second baseman, accounted for both Philadelphia runs. In the second inning he singled Gus Suhr in from second, and in the fourth he hit his first National League home run.

Hal Schumacher went the route for the Giants, giving eight hits.

Marion Brown Second In Play Against Par At Indian Spring

Three home club strokers—Mrs. Charlotte Stern, Mrs. W. R. Stokes and Mrs. R. T. Kreuzberg—tied for top honors yesterday in Indian Spring's ladies day feature, a match play tournament against par. They were each two down at the end of the round. Marion Brown, club champion, finished alone in the runner-up spot—three down.

Mrs. J. S. Gross was the best among the guests, taking first prize by dropping only five holes to par.

Congressional

The penalty tournament at Congressional's ladies day activity was taken by Mrs. T. S. Teal with a low score of 20 points. Mrs. H. A. Knox, with 40 points, was second. Low putts for the round was registered by Mrs. R. L. Rose. She had only 28.

Burning Tree

At Burning Tree, the newly signed professional, Lewis Worsham, jr., second-place finisher in the Maryland Open earlier in the week, toured the course in 67 strokes, five under par. His string of six birdies in succession, starting with the third hole, was considered some sort of record. He was in a foursome composed of Al Jamison, Representative Jack Nichols and Bill McEvoy.

Washington

Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely won a three-club tournament held yesterday as the weekly ladies day feature at the Washington Golf and Country Club. Mrs. Tschiffely and Mrs. Wilda Martin both had 79s and the former won the draw for first. Mrs. Tschiffely had 91—12—79 and Mrs. Martin, 92—13—79.

Third went to Mrs. J. S. Connolly with 104—24—80.

Lynch Routs Davie Johnsen In M. A. Tennis

G. W. Student Sadly Off Form, Is Beaten In Semis, 6—0, 6—3

By Jack Munhall.

Flubbing the easiest shots like a novice and becoming more and more panicky each time his normally picture-book strokes exploded in his face, young Davie Johnsen yesterday suffered one of the worst lacings of his career as he lost to Hugh Lynch in the semifinal round of the Middle Atlantic States championships at Edgemoor.

By the near-incredible scores of 6—0 and 6—3 Lynch recorded his second straight victory over the 19-year-old George Washington student whom he recently predicted he should never beat again and advanced to another titular encounter with Defending Champion Barney Welsh. They will meet at 2:30 this afternoon.

Complete Collapse

Johnsen's complete collapse yesterday was so startling that not until Lynch had shot over a cross-court placement to end the match could the gallery realize the decisiveness of the rout of the youngster who has been touted the inevitable successor to Welsh.

Only four points did Johnsen make in the first set and never did he hold a game lead on the steadily stroking Lynch who committed the amazingly low total of one error in that first set. Davie improved noticeably in the second set and Lynch commensurately made more errors, but the result was never in doubt.

Hugh, starting with the love set, and continuing into the fifth game of the second set won ten games in a row and had an ad? on the eleventh before Johnsen finally broke through in a deuced game. It was thought then that he might regain his confidence and poise and offer Lynch a battle, but in the very next game he relapsed into wildness again and Hugh took a prohibitive 5-1 lead.

Makes 54 Errors

It mattered little that Davie stepped up his output of placements to win the seventh and eighth games, for Lynch broke service in the ninth for the match.

How completely ineffectual Johnsen was is seen in the stroke analysis. He made 54 errors in the two sets as against only 13 for Lynch, and also was guilty of the one double fault of the match. Only in placements did Johnsen have an edge—15 to 7—and that is misleading for Lynch seldom took a chance. It wasn't necessary, with Johnson swinging wildly and often batting out as many as three of Lynch's services in succession.

Johnsen gained some consolation and remained in the tournament shortly afterwards when he teamed with Lynch to advance to the doubles finals with an 8—6, 6—4 victory over Alphonso Smith and Dick Murphy. This was a well-played match in which Lynch and Johnsen overcame a 5-1 deficit to win the first set and then repelled a second-set rally by their foes who pulled from 2-5 to 4-5.

The point score:

First Set Johnsen serves—							T.	G.
Johnsen	2	0	1	1	0	1—	5	0
Lynch	4	4	4	4	4	4—	24	6
Second set Johnsen serves—							T.	G.

Fight Announcer's Presence of Mind Averts Fire Panic

Boise, Idaho, Aug. 11 (AP).—A fight announcer's presence of mind averted panic and possible tragedy in a fan-packed sports arena gutted by a near million-dollar fire which blazed into the early hours of today.

Hero of the conflagration, which burned $750,000 worth of Civilian Conservation Corps equipment, was James Allen, sports writer of the Nampa (Idaho) Free Press for 17 years.

Five hundred spectators rose like a wave.

A plainclothes fireman slipped to Allen's side and whispered for him to clear the arena—that the situation was serious.

"It's just a paper fire in the dressing room," Allen told the fans and they settled back in their seats.

Then, he added:

"I think we'd better clear the arena until the smoke clears out—then we'll continue with the fight."

Quietly the spectators moved out.

Minutes later the arena was an inferno.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Lake Mohawk, N. J., Aug. 11.—Well over 2,000,000 customers have seen Billy Rose's Aquacade at the World's Fair, and perhaps a million saw his Aquacade at Cleveland a couple years ago. But up here we've got a fellow named Alexander Ott who is working on his fourth or fifth millionth water vaudeville customer. He invented that strange combination of swimming, diving and peep shows in 1914, but as is often the case with pioneers, he hasn't made as much in his lifetime as Rose will make out of the fair this year.

CONSIDINE

Ott is a cheerful brown man, thick of frame and heavy of voice, who runs water shows at the Miami Biltmore Pool in the winter, and here at the Marine Pool in the summer. This year he also has been doubling at Jones Beach with a show that has much of the same cockeyed majesty that Rose's possesses. Rose shades this one only by the margin of a theme song, plus, of course, Nellie Holm.

Ott was first to use Johnny Weissmuller, Marshall Wayne, Pete Desjardins, Sam Howard and others who, in more or less the evening of their careers, are now playing to the most tremendous audiences of their careers at the Aquacade. He first worked out the theory of a water ballet and the other stunts which Rose developed and glamorized, being an abler showman. Ott, probably because he was an old lifeguard and a a good swimmer and diver, stressed competitive events and dragged in the A. A. U. brass hats for bows.

In doing this he unearthed Katharine Rawls, perhaps the greatest all around swimmer we've had; Ralph Flanagan, our best bet for the 1940 Olympics; and little Mary Hoerger, who was national women's senior champion at 12.

Looked Upon as Plagiarist

Rose saw the theatrical value of the sport and in developing it the little showman has indirectly done as much for swimming and diving as any man in history. The ironic part of the whole phenomenal boom in tank shows, however, is that in some quarters Ott, the originator, is now looked upon as a loud interloper and a plagiarist of Rose's stuff, though he was experimenting gingerly with this million dollar idea in the days when Annette Kellerman's dowdy-looking one-piece suit was the subject of indignant sermons.

The pioneer now thinks he may ride back to his No. 1 position as a water impresario on the strength of a sensational new stunt. One of his former lifeguards at Lake Mohawk, a slim, good-looking boy named Walter Buro, has built a catapult which pitches him (Buro, of course, Ott's no fool) more than 100 feet through the air and dunks him with a terrific splash in the shallow end of the pool.

It is a strange and evil looking device, consisting of a rude framework of steel, a sled that is pulled back like a slingshot, and many strands of rubberized shock cord, which serve as the sled's and Buro's means of propulsion. He gets a 20,000-pound pressure on the cords, and the sled, just before it throws him off at the top of its short zooming trip, attains a speed of close to 200 miles an hour. It throws him about 70 feet in the air and about 100 feet forward.

Catapulter Takes Lengthy Precautions

The kid, who has more sense than you'd expect, wears a test pilot's belt to hold his stomach muscles in position. When the sled is pulled down against the terrific drag of the shock cord, the kid coats himself with a layer of lard, smears a little more on the sled, and then lies down on the inclined sled which is pointing up at the top of the baleful apparatus at a 35-degree angle.

He has a little platform to stand on. He takes a great deal of time seeing that his neck and backbone are in perfect alignment, and that his knees are stiff. He has been warned by doctors that if he does not do these things his body will buckle and break under the terrific impact of the start. He breaks the shock of the start a little by making the shock cords first spin a heavy flywheel, before they start pulling the sled up the incline, but even at that the sudden rush of blood from his brain, causes him momentarily to lose consciousness.

When he takes the thing over to Jones Beach soon for one of Ott's shows, he wants to put the whole works up on a high platform so he can go higher into the air and farther out into space. He thinks that somewhere along in that thrilling parabola, about the time he recovers consciousness, he can double up his body and break the world's record for somersaults in the air. The record is 4½, in case you want to beat him to it.

Reds and Cards Start Crucial Series Today

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 11.—Bill McKechnie, manager of Cincinnati, set the pace for members of his team and the St. Louis Cardinals today. He went into the country to get his mind off the three-game series starting tomorrow.

WALTERS

Not all the players sought rural retreats but all took it easy. No workouts were held.

The boss of the National League leaders—7½ games ahead of the Cardinals who have won 10 straight—indicated his pitcher for the first game would be Bucky Walters, who will be trying for his twentieth victory.

Ray Blades, manager of St. Louis, said his starting pitcher would be one of three—Lon Warneke, Curt Davis, both veterans, and Morton Cooper, up for his first full year in the majors. They are right-handers as is Walters. Warneke has won 10, Davis 15 and Cooper 8. The two who do not start tomorrow probably will pitch in Sunday's doubleheader.

Two and a half months ago the Reds came to town trailing the Cards by a scant margin, took three of four games and jumped into the lead. St. Louis, of course, could not rise from second even with a sweep of this series, but observers agree if they did the Reds might not win the pennant.

A sweep for Cincinnati—or even two of three—and fans will be fairly safe in planning to be in the Ohio River metropolis for the World Series.

Reds Purchase Barons for Farm Chain

By the Associated Press

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 11.—The Cincinnati Reds purchased the Birmingham Barons of the Southern Association today.

Warren C. Giles, general manager of the Reds, announced the purchase after a conference with Ed Norton, Birmingham club president. The sum paid was not disclosed, although it is believed to have been $225,000.

The Birmingham baseball club now is in sixth place in the eight-team Class A-1 association, with a season record of 51 games won and 66 lost.

Giles said the club would become Cincinnati property as soon as necessary papers could be signed.

No immediate changes in player personnel are contemplated, the Red executive said, although moves to strengthen the Birmingham team will "come as soon as possible."

Giles will be president of the new operating corporation, with Frank Lane as vice president and Bill McKechnie, jr., son of the Cincinnati manager, as secretary-treasurer. McKechnie will make his home in Birmingham.

Bill West, business manager for the Barons for several years, will be retained in an advisory capacity.

The Birmingham club will be the top link in the Cincinnati baseball system. The purchase includes all players now owned by the Barons and Rickwood Field, one of the best baseball plants in the minors.

Losing teams in 1937, 1938 and this year brought reduced attendance, although Norton said the club was "in the black" for the two years of his control.

Andy K Is Favored in Winner-Take-All Saratoga Special

Noted Racers To Start in Sporty Event

Flight Command, Bimelech, Now What And Call to Colors Are Nominated

By the Associated Press

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 11.—They'll be playing for keeps in tomorrow's Saratoga special so the owner of the winning horse will take down all the prize money available for America's sportiest race.

Important as another chance for Andy K. to try and stay in the race track for 6 furlongs, the special also is the only race in the land in which the winner takes all. That, if all nine nominees go to the post, would be $9,750.

Andy K., despite a tendency to run out which has cost him two disqualifications in 14 racing days, has been made overnight favorite for the event. His trainer, Anthony Pelcterri, swears he's got the running out trait licked and the boys who lay the odds are quite willing to believe him.

Also the 6-furlong sprint is C. V. Whitney's Flight Command, the horse moved into the winning spot of the United States Hotel Stakes last week after Andy K.'s latest disqualification. Col. E. R. Bradley's unbeaten Bimelech, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's crack filly, Now What, and the Manhasset Stable's highly regarded Call To Colors also figure to make a race of it. All entries save the filly will carry 122 pounds, she having a 3-pound sex allowance.

Furnished by the horsemen themselves, who pay $250 each for the privilege of naming three horses and an additional $250 to start one of them, the special's purse is the largest on the day's card which also includes the Champlain Handicap for older horses. That one is estimated to be worth $4,500.

Griffmen Open Against Bosox

tomorrow and it has to be Ken Chase and Joe Haynes in Sunday's double-header. They are the only Washington pitchers who will have had sufficient rest.

Washington's pitchers will be strictly on their mettle in Fenway Park. The Boston team, especially built for their home park, is loaded with right-handed hitters who shoot at the nearby leftfield fences, and the Nats, with a preponderance of southpaw hitters, are at a disadvantage.

The Red Sox will have ample incentive to mop up against the Nats on this trip. Again they are at the heels of the Yankees, only six games to the rear, and the Yanks will be meeting up with the pushover Athletics, while the Sox are playing the Nats, with the prospect that every game Boston loses to Washington will result in a full-game loss in the league standings.

Harris will send the same lineup against the Red Sox which has won all of the Nats' last four series. Jimmy Vernon is his only first baseman, but Jimmy Bloodworth will be retained at second despite the fact that the injured Buddy Myer is now available. Travis will play shortstop against all kinds of pitching, and Buddy Lewis, of course, will be at third.

The only change Harris may make would be the benching of Taft Wright in favor of Bobby Estalella if the Sox serve up any left-handed pitching.

The three-gaited saddle horse championship, always a popular feature in this section of Virginia, was won by last year's victor, Golden Nugget, owned by L. S. Gosnell. Reserve went to T. B. Stanley's Amy DDavis, with her owner in the saddle.

Breeding championship went to Meadow Lane Farm for the third straight year, this time with a chestnut 2-year-old.

New Orleans' Selling Drops Cotton Prices

Futures Dip 6 to 11 Points, With July Slumping Most

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 11.—Determined selling by a New Orleans operator broke through comparatively feeble resistance in the cotton futures market today and prices dropped 6 to 11 points.

Reports from New Orleans indicated that market took a little more serious view of the suspension of payments by Mendelssohn & Co., Amsterdam banking concern, than New York.

Buying was lackadaisical at best, although there was a flurry of demand based on fears that a tropical storm hovering around the coast of Florida might strike at the Eastern cotton belt.

The July delivery bore the brunt of the New Orleans offerings. Traders estimated that about 8,000 bales were disposed of in that delivery, although considerable liquidation in October, December and May also appeared.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures took a licking again today closing 4 to 7 points lower. All deliveries were at new lows for the season.

Despite a morning runiup, which brokers credited to technical reasons, heavy liquidation not under way once more which uncovered considerable stop-loss selling. Action of outside markets operated against improvement in oil.

Sales totaled 360 lots: September 5.36, October *5.42, December *5.87, January 5.63, March 5.71.

Crude oil sold sparingly in the Southeast at 4 cents. Valley was quoted 4¾ bid and Texas 4¼@4¾ nominal.

Suspension of Large Dutch-German Bank Fails to Ruffle Securities; Steels, Rails And Stores Lead Moderate Decline

New York, Aug. 1.—The small accumulation of overnight buying orders served to give only brief firmness to the stock market today. Conservatism, based on Danzig and the added worry of the large Dutch-German bank suspension, ruled throughout.

Stocks and bonds finished a trifle lower on quite moderate volume. Steels, rail equipments and stores were the only groups to show sizable losses. Gains in motor and food divisions were offset to the extent that the general level showed only a nominal change, the 100 stocks in the New York Herald Tribune's average ending .05 point down.

Puzzling to Wall Street was the strength of the guilder in the face of the Mendelssohn & Co. suspension, the only explanation being that control funds were operating most successfully to offset such selling as may have resulted from the news. For that matter, however, there were no perceptible repercussions in any quarter except cotton although the bank was the largest underwriting concern on the continent. Information as to the cause, liabilities and other details of the suspension were somewhat vague save that authoritative persons here declared New York or other American institutions which have been associated with the Dutch concern in the past have no financial worry in the matter.

Reasons for Closing

Death of the firm's principal partner, Dr. Fritz Mannheimer, on Thursday, and belief that the firm had sustained heavy losses on recent French and Belgian underwritings were among possible reasons advanced for the closing. Advices from London and Paris, however, suggested that neither British nor French bankers were involved and securities markets as well as exchange transactions appeared to support this view.

The further drop in automobile output reported by Ward's was seasonal and somewhat less than expected. Steel centers disclosed expectations for maintenance or increase in output schedules next week. Electrical machinery sales for the first half were reported 18 per cent ahead of a year ago. Sharp seasonal expansion in the canning industry was another bright spot.

General Motors led the list in activity although at a half point loss. Chrysler, on the other hand, advanced 1⅜ and most others in the auto group were higher on the day.

Oils Hold Firm

Oils held well, considering the uncertainties of the crude oil price structure and its possible effect later on retail gasoline quotations. Standard of New Jersey, one of the few actives in this section was down ⅛. Coppers were irregular, but Anaconda made a substantial advance. After the close the Copper Institute disclosed that stocks of the red metal showed the largest reduction in July of any month so far this year.

Canadian Pacific appeared in the active division at a loss of half a point, rather a severe mark down for so low-priced an issue. American carrier shares, while uneven, were little changed as a group. Blocks ranging up to 2,500 shares appeared at the opening, when the best prices of the day were recorded, including 2,500 for Chrysler, 1,500 for U. S. Steel common, a like amount for Columbia Gas, and 1,000 each for New York Central, Radio, United Gas Improvement, General Motors and Republic Steel.

Bond Trade Dull

Bond dealings were completely in the summer doldrums today, with the Amsterdam failure of Mendelssohn & Co. and the continued uncertainty about international political affairs occasioning additional aloofness. Investment issues were stable in small trading. Among speculative bonds minor gains and losses were recorded. Turnover in all issues amounted only to $3,550,000, which is less than a normal Saturday would produce.

In the Treasury list week-end influences were at work, and changes reflected chiefly evening-out of the yield schedule.

Speculative railroad securities sowed some net gains, but more losses and the losses were more emphatic. Holding company bonds and the convertible group moved irregularly. Local tractions varied only by small fractions, and in either direction. The tone was better in local tractions, while other special groups remained inert.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 11.—The stock market closed with a strong forward price movement today after opening irregularly. The "city" apparently found nothing in Danzig leader Forstler's speech to cause immediate concern. British funds advanced an outside of £¼. Transatlantics, however, failed to maintain early steadiness and ended fractionally to more than a point down. Gold stocks were in good demand and rubbers were evenly maintained. Domestic rails and most industrials coasted along evenly. Oils recovered balance after early weakness.

Paris.—Bourse dealings were at a slightly faster tempo today and most prices were clipped fractionally. The Danzig speech of Albert Forster was ignored as a market influence while failure of the Amsterdam Investment Banking firm, of Mendelssohn & Co., was mirrored in slight weakening of Netherlands shares. Gold stocks were resistant on London demand. Rentes ended 30 centimes lower to 5 higher.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures closed ⅛ penny higher to ½ lower today. Improved United States crop prospects were bearishly construed but some covering appeared toward the close. Cotton futures finished 2 to 3 points lower in a dawdling trade under scattered hedging and liquidation.

Wheat Closes Slightly Off; Corn Is Firm

Easing Alien Tension, Bigger Crop Estimates Are Bearish Factors

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Wheat futures fluctuated unevenly today scoring net gains of ⅛ cent at times, but closing finally ⅛ to a cent under the previous finish. Corn was firm.

Easing political tension abroad and an upward revision of 14,777,000 bushels by the United States Government in the 1939 wheat crop prospects influenced an early downturn prices sagging as much as ¾ cent. At that level, however, prices firmed and then advanced, with September contracts leading. The nearby delivery was bought against sales of both December and May, and advanced to 65¼ cents, up ⅞ from the previous close.

Relative strength in the September contract was attributed to a tightening situation in the cash market, due to the large volume of wheat going into Government loan.

All contracts, however, sagged in the closing moments, September finishing at 64¼@64⅛, and December at 64⅛@64: Corn closed ¼ to ⅜ cent higher; September, 43; December, 42¼@42⅜. Oats, ⅛ to ½ cent up; soy beans, ⅛ to ¼ cent up; rye unchanged to ⅜ cent off, and lard 7 to 10 cents lower.

Brazil Removes Peg On German Marks

Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 11 (AP).—The Bank of Brazil, chief financial organization of the nation, notified the German banks operating in Brazil today that, effective immediately, Germany's "compensation marks" will fluctuate in value instead of remaining on their previous fixed basis.

The order, American diplomatic sources said, places the German currency—used in the Reich's barter trade with Brazil—on a level which removes the advantage previously held by the compensation mark over the United States dollar.

In effect, these authorities said, the mark now is pegged to the United States dollar for purposes of German trade in Brazil.

Rukeyser Says: Trend Grows To Industry And Thrift

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser,
International News Service Economic Commentator.

TORRID TEMPERATURE at home, tense international situations, domestic politics at war with business and agriculture out of balance with industry are currently restraining economic activity in the United States.

Against these hazards stand the power of the human impulse for better living.

The average man seems to be losing interest in panaceas and in Utopia-building.

There is a trend toward simple arithmetic and thrift and industry.

This changing attitude is casting its shadow over future economic events.

New influences are being generated to resist the forces which have long been operating, but time will be needed to resist the momentum of depression.

Change is in the offing, but mere change may prove disappointing unless progress is made in removing the basic maladjustments, such as the disparity between agriculture and industry, which hold business in the subnormal zone.

AT THE MOMENT the country is drastically underpromoted.

In the circumstances, the sales-minded person is the socially useful man of the hour.

With the spend-lend scheme sidetracked, the time is ripe for sincerely telling consumers that they can contribute to national prosperity by going into the stores and buying something. Thus they set in motion job-giving circumstances.

It is time for businessmen to recognize that a decade of depression has created vast shortages in consumer inventories and has accumulated a substantial amount of obsolescence.

When there are signs that the national economy is approaching balance there will be released a huge pent-up demand for durable goods.

ADVANCED ANALYSIS is challenging the conventional notions of national income, which indicate that 15 per cent of the product goes in interest, dividends, etc., as wages on capital. A newer view is that the income that goes to capitalists is largely a clearing item in a bookkeeping sense, and in the course of time is reflected in hours of work on the part of gainfully employed workers. For the most part capitalists, large and small, promptly redistribute their dividend and interest income in job-giving purchases of consumer or producer goods.

By the Associated Press

Anacostia High Prepares Better Grid Facilities

Stands to Seat 1,500 To Be Erected in Time For 1940 Home Games

In its third year of participation in the interhigh football scramble, Anacostia High will blossom forth with one of the finest gridirons in the city, Coach Rolland Lund revealed yesterday.

It's field, sodded last year but left idle, will be used for four home games, and stands accommodating nearly 1,500 spectators will be erected.

Lund, whose tiny Indian teams have furnished most of the upsets since their introduction into the public school series, also announced that seven lettermen will be back in uniform. Two stars, Quarterback Perry Seaman and Halfback Bob Gordon, will be in school but unable to play due to the age rule.

The Anacostians will particularly look forward to the second game on their schedule. After meeting Orrel Mitchell's Purple Gonzaga eleven to start things on September 22, the Indians will travel to Perth Amboy, N. J., on September 30 for a clash with the local high school. A tour of the New York World Fair will be made after the game.

McKinley High, which the Indians upset last year with Gordon's intercepted pass and 40-yard dash to a touchdown, is the first interhigh opponent on October 6, and its other public high foes will be Eastern, Woodrow Wilson and Roosevelt.

Grid schedule:
September 22, Gonzaga, away; 30, Perth Amboy (N. J.) High, away.
October 6, Tech at home (interhigh); 13, St. John's, at home; 20, Eastern, away (interhigh); 27, Washington-Lee, at home.
November 3, Woodrow Wilson, away (interhigh); 10, Roosevelt, at home (interhigh).

Bobby Leitch Advances at Virginia Net

Richmond Champion Wins Default in Northern Tourney

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 11.—With defending champion, Alphonso Smith and Dick Murphy, of Washington, seeded No. 1 and 2, not expected to participate until Monday, the Northern Virginia Tennis Tournament opened here today with a number of first-round matches.

Bobby Leitch, Richmond City and Southside Virginia champion, moved past the first round unexpectedly when Lieut. G. A. Bell, of Quantico, was forced to forfeit after wrenching his back.

Results today were: Cleaves Johnson over Garnett Gouldman, 6—4, 6—2; Dr. Gerard B. Creigh, of Dahlgren, over John Musante, 6—1, 6—1; Peck Garrett over Dr. R. F. Caverlee, 6—4, 6—1; Henry C. Gore over Dr. Gordon Moss, 6—2, 6—2; Lieut W. S. McCormick, Quantico, over Dr. L. T. E. Thompson, Dahlgren, 8—6, 7—5; Byrd Holloway over Frank Levinson, 6—2, 2—6, 6—0.

Ahearn Plans Another Heavy Fight Show

With the local boxing business taking on new life as a result of the Nathan Mann-Steve Dudas fight card Monday night, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday began working on another all-heavyweight show—this one to be held August 21 at "popular prices."

At the same time, Col. Harvey L. Miller received a wire from Ancil Hoffman, manager of Max and Buddy Baer, stating he will notify local boxing officials Monday if Buddy will be available for a main bout here September 12 with Mann as a highlight of the National Boxing Commission's convention.

A favorable report is expected from Hoffman, but Ahearn woefully reported he will ask an "impossible" guarantee.

While plans for the August 21 show are in the formative stages, it is understood that the old warrior, Marty Gallagher, now in training for a comeback, will get a nod from Ahearn.

Buddy Knox, Akron fighter, and Jim Robinson, of Baltimore, are also likely material. Maynard Daniels, the Marine who scored a 40-second knockout over Jake Friedman, Monday night, may return on the card although his handlers do not wish to rush him along.

Tentative plans call for two 10-round heavyweight fights and three 6-rounders.

Sailors to Be Foe

The softball team of the U. S. S. Reina Mercedes, docked at Annapolis, will be tomorrow's opponents for the Hamilton Decorators. The Decorators will meet at Ross School at 12 noon.

Chiggers and Ivy Put Guardsmen In Hospitals

Nature's most unwelcome pests—chiggers and poison ivy—besieged the fighting men at Manassas yesterday.

With the ranks already depleted by attacks of stomach cramps from green apples and appendicitis, some civilian soldiers were ready to throw up their hands and "call the whole thing off." One protested, "Who can fight and scratch at the same time?"

Two of the National Guardsmen were sufficiently incapacitated by chigger bites and poison ivy to require hospital treatment.

Yesterday's toll of eight brought the total casualties to 48 for the mimic war. Men have been hospitalized for appendicitis, broken jaws and fingers from personal wars, stomach cramps and colds.

IN MEMORIAM.

TUKE, HAZEL E.—In loving memory of my dear daughter, HAZEL E. TUKE, who passed away one year ago, August 12, 1938.

In my heart your memory lingers
Always tender, fond and true.
There is not a day, dear Hazel,
I do not think of you.

Sad and sudden was the call
Of one so dearly loved by all;
A bitter grief, a shock severe,
It was to part with one so dear.
We often sit and think of you
And speak of how you died.
To think you could not say goodbye,
Before you closed your eyes.
For all of us you did your best;
Oh, God grant you eternal rest.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Today's hand is called Houdini Coup in England. It occurred in a championship match for the Gold Cup and only one player made nine tricks at hearts. As frequently happens when weird figures appear on the score sheet, the result was challenged. The player disclaimed the title of Houdini, but he admitted he knew a few tricks about bridge.

The hand and the bidding are given in today's box.

Can you discover the way he won nine tricks?

Terrence Reese, who reports the hand in The British Bridge World, offers this explanation:

"There is apparently no play at all because declarer has to lose two diamond tricks, a spade trick and two trump tricks, just fulfilling the contract. But one ingenious South player found a way to drop a loser.

"West opened with the queen of diamonds and South trumped the third round of the suit. When South played the ace and king of hearts, he learned the bad news in trumps. Up to this point the play was the same at all tables but our hero next put dummy in with a club and trumped a diamond, re-entered dummy with a club and trumped a club. East had to discard, lest South shed his losing spade, should East trump high. Dummy was re-entered again with the ace of spades and the last losing club led to promote that extra trick in trumps, en passant.

"East was a dotard. He should have overtaken West's opening lead of the queen of diamonds with his king, and switched to the queen of trumps. In order to win his extra trick, South must trump four times; and as North holds only three entries, it is impossible for South to consummate all four ruffs if the defense deprives South of his precious extra ruff by stubbornly refusing to lead anything South can trump."

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

The FBI has established a special fingerprint file as a record for those who seek Civil Service appointments for CCC enrollees, enlisted personnel of the Army and employes in Federal agencies.

It may be the Government's one strong record against many applicants for appointment. In the past, many who have sought admittance to Uncle Sam's employment rolls have been stopped by their fingerprint records. Now, with the new file under way, the FBI exposes a few of the unhappy instances, as follows:

Recently the fingerprints of an individual seeking appointment as a Federal employe in Los Angeles were identified, and reflected that the individual had a record of criminal activity for the past 23 years, having been arrested 33 times on such charges as purchase and sale of narcotics, shoplifting, grand larceny, armed robbery, receiving stolen property and drunkenness.

Another applicant was found to have several aliases. He had previously been sentenced to two penal institutions to serve a one to ten year term for grand larceny and a two-year term for desertion from the Navy. One applicant, whose fingerprints were examined, was found to have been arrested 32 times.

"The Government service file serves two valuable purposes," the FBI said. "First, it protects the Government service, and secondly, this file for the first time, affords to Government employes the protective advantage of insuring the establishment of their identity under all conditions through the years to come."

The file will be maintained separate and apart from the criminal fingerprint files of the FBI. At this time, the fingerprints of the WPA workers in certain jobs of trust in New York, CCC enrollees and other Federal employes are being removed from the civil files of the FBI so that they may be placed in the new Government service files.

The Civil Service Commission, in 1929, adopted the policy of referring all fingerprints of applicants for Federal appointment to the FBI. Then, one out of each 13 fingerprint cards was identified when searched throuh the criminal files. In the past fiscal year, only one out of each 35 applicants was found to have an arrest record. A very good showing.

Senator George W. Norris and Representative John W. Rankin will be special guests of the Federal Power Commission's staff at a picnic arranged by an employes' joint committee in co-operation with A. F. G. E. Lodge No. 421. The event will be held today at picnic grove No. 25, Sixteenth and Kennedy streets northwest, Rock Creek Park, beginning at 2 p. m.

Other honor guests will be Acting Chairman Claude L. Draper and Commissioner Leland Olds of the Power Commission. There will be games and other entertainment events. Earl F. Sechrest, administrative assistant, is chairman. On the committee are: Arthur Parker, E. C. Koontz, Mildred Snyder, Wynson Light, Calvin Dold, Jack Thomas, Mrs. M. H. Barnes, J. Baine, Mrs. M. A. Bolton, Richard Kane, Mrs. L. M. Seidman, J. S. Rice, Miss M. R. Wolfe, Regina Roth, Mrs. V. B. Henderson, Mrs. M. P. Wojehoski, F. L. Weaver, Mrs. R. D. Hook, Mrs. J. C. Loving, Mrs. K. B. Williams, Mrs. K. M. Regan, Miss P. Leonard, Mrs. F. Few, C. C. Crane, Miss H. C. Snider, Irving Roth, Rose Robbins, Irving Fulks, W. W. Seegars and Mrs. C. M. Upton.

H. B. Vincent, jr., was re-elected president of the Farm Credit Club for 1939-40 at the club's recently annual meeting.

Other officers elected were: R. O. Brownell, vice president; Mildred M. Crew, recording secretary; Janet Battey, executive secretary (ex-officio); R. D. Snow, treasurer, and T. L. Piper, D. A. Right, Margaret C. Olsen, W. J. McNamee, P. L. Rapp, and L. F. G. Goyette, directors.

First activity of the beginning club year, President Vincent said, will be a moonlight cruise August 18. There will be a 45-minute stop at Marshall Hall. The cruise will begin at 8:30 p. m. but tickets will also be good on the 5:30 p. m. boat if some club members wish to go down to the Marshall Hall Park earlier and return with the rest of the party later in the evening.

NUTS AND JOLTS

Chapter 67

Jody said, "I had to come home."

"Why, shore you did."

"I ain't meant what I said. Hatin' you——"

The light broke into the familiar smile.

"Why, shore you ain't. 'When I was a child, I spake as a child.'"

Penny stirred in his chair.

"They's rations in the safe. In the kittle there. You hongry?"

"I ain't et but oncet. Last night."

"Not but oncet? Then now you know. Ol' Starvation—" His eyes shone in the firelight as Jody had pictured them. "Ol' Starvation—he's got a face meaner'n ol' Slewfoot, ain't he?"

"Hit's fearful."

"There's biscuits there. Open the honey. There's due to be milk in the gourd."

Jody fumbled among the dishes. He ate standing, wolfing down the food. He dipped into a dish of cooked cow-peas with his fingers, scooping them into his mouth. Penny stared at him.

He said, "I'm sorry you had to learn it that-a-way."

"Where's Ma?"

"She's drove the wagon to the Forresters to trade for seed-corn. She figgered she'd try to plant a part of a crop again. She carried the chickens, to trade. It hurted her pride turrible, but she was obliged to go."

Jody closed the door of the cabinet.

He said, "I should of washed. I'm awful dirty."

"There's warm water on the hearth."

Jody poured water in the basin and scrubbed his face and arms and hands. The water was too dark even for his feet. He threw it out of the door and poured more, and sat on the floor and washed his feet.

Penny said, "I'd be proud to know where you been."

"I been on the river. I aimed to go to Boston."

"I see."

He looked small and shrunken inside the quilts.

Jody said, "How you makin' it, Pa? You better?"

PENNY looked a long time into the embers on the hearth.

He said, "You jest as good to know the truth. I ain't scarcely wuth shootin'."

Jody said, "When I git the work done, you got to leave me go fetch ol' Doc to you."

Penny studied him.

He said, "You've done come back different. You've takened a punishment. You ain't a yearlin' no longer. Jody——"

"Yes, sir."

"I'm goin' to talk to you, man to man. You figgered I went back on you. Now there's a thing ever' man has got to know. Mebbe you know it a'ready. 'Twan't only me. 'Twan't only your yearlin' deer havin' to be destroyed. Boy, life goes back on you."

Jody looked at his father. He nodded.

Penny said, "You've seed how things goes in the world o' men. You've knowed men to be low-down and mean. You've seed ol' Death at his tricks. You've messed around with ol' Starvation. Ever' man wants life to be a fine thing, and a easy. 'Tis fine, boy, powerful fine, but 'tain't easy. Life knocks a man down and he gits up and it knocks him down agin. I've been uneasy all my life."

His hands worked at the folds of the quilt.

"I've wanted life to be easy for you. Easier'n 'twas for me. A man's heart aches, seein' his young uns face the world. Knowin' they got to git their guts tore out, the way his was tore. I wanted to spare you long as I could. I wanted you to frolic with your yearlin'. I knowed the lonesomeness he eased for you. But ever' man's lonesome. What's he to do then? What's he to do when he gits knocked down? Why, take it for his share and go on."

Jody said, "I'm 'shamed I runned off."

Penny sat upright.

He said, "You're near enough growed to do your choosin'. Could be you'd crave to go to sea, like Oliver. There's men seems made for the land, and men seems made for the sea. But I'd be proud did you choose to live here and farm the clearin'. I'd be proud to see the day when you got a well dug, so's no woman here'd be obliged to do her washin' on a seepage hillside. You willin'?"

"I'm willin'."

"Shake hands."

He closed his eyes. The fire on the hearth had burned to embers. Jody banked them with the ashes, to assure live coals in the morning.

Penny said, "Now I'll need some he'p, gittin' to the bed. Looks like your Ma's spendin' the night."

JODY PUT his shoulder under him and Penny leaned heavily on it. He hobbled to his bed. Jody drew the quilt over him.

"Hit's food and drink to have you home, boy. Git to bed and git your rest. 'Night."

The words warmed him through. "'Night, Pa."

He went to his room and closed the door. He took off his tattered shirt and breeches and climbed in under the warm quilts. His bed was soft and yielding. He lay luxuriously, stretching his legs. He must be up early in the morning, to milk the cow and bring in wood and work the crops. When he worked them Flag would not be there to play about with him. His father would no longer take the heavy part of the burden. It did not matter. He could manage alone.

He found himself listening for something. It was the sound of the yearling for which he listened, running around the house or stirring on his moss pallet in the corner of the bedroom. He would never hear him again. He wondered if his mother had thrown dirt over Flag's carcass, or if the buzzards had cleaned it. Flag—He did not believe he should ever again love anything, man or woman or his own child, as he had loved the yearling. He would be lonely all his life. But a man took it for his share and went on.

In the beginning of his sleep he cried out, "Flag!"

It was not his own voice that called. It was a boy's voice. Somewhere beyond the sink-hole, past the magnolia, under the live oaks, a boy and a yearling ran side by side, and were gone forever.

The End.

'Pedal-Pushers' Coast Into Town

DOROTHY HELEN SMITH, LEADER OF BIKE-RIDERS

Fifteen Far Western girls rode into Washington yesterday on bicycles, with several skinned knees, coats of sun tan, a jabbering of conversation over the beauties of Banff, the bigness of New England when it seems so small on the maps, and a curiosity about that book, "The Grapes of Wrath," that they haven't read but keep being asked about.

They are school teachers and students and farmers' daughters from California, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Montana.

The point is, said the black-haired farmer's daughter from Oregon, that the bicycle seat may become uncomfortable at times, but there are periods of riding the trains, and the trip could be made for $200. There are bad moments, such as in Canada near Banff, when the winds blew so strongly that the bicycles had to be pushed downhill.

"You couldn't even pedal them in low-gear down the hills," the California girl called through the door while washing her hair. "But it doesn't cost but $200, including food and and lodging and train fare," said the Oregon girl.

Many of the cyclists are in their 'teens and tell their age. Others are older and say to just let it go at that. They like bicycling and seeing the country and talking about things they left behind on the road and other things they hope to see when the ride takes up again from here Monday back to California by way of the Ozarks.
